Were you in woods at time of assault on teenager?

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

POLICE are appealing for witnesses after a serious assault on Singleton.

The incident is reported to have taken place between 7.45am and 8.30am on Friday, June 29, in the Millennium Woods area of Bucksford Lane and Green Fields Lane, near the John Wesley School.

A 17-year-old girl is reported to have been assaulted by a man who is described as being 6ft tall and white.

The area was taped off directly after the incident and forensic officers were drafted in to examine the area for potential leads in the case.

Detective Inspector Gavin

Moss from the Kent and Essex Serious Crime Directorate has called for potential witnesses to step forward.

He said: "The area is very popular with dog walkers so we are sure there would have been other people in the vicinity at the time."

"I would appeal to anyone who saw a man acting suspiciously to contact us, however minor they think their information may be."

Anyone who was in the area at the time or has any information about the incident is asked to contact detectives at Kent Police by calling 01303 289600.

Alternatively, people can call Kent Crimestoppers anonymously on 0800 555 111.

LAKE PLAN REVEALED

AN exhibition outlining plans on the proposed Conningbrook Lakes country park is to be held late this month.

The plans to design a park combining leisure activities and a wildlife park have been discussed by locals for many years, and designs have finally been set out by developers.

If planning permission is granted, the public could use elements of the site as early as spring 2013.

The proposals, which have been drawn out by Brett, include a lake for sailing and other water-based activities, as well as green spaces for walks and cycling.

The exhibition will be held at shopping complex County Square on Thursday, July 12, between 10am and 7pm and Friday, July 13, between 10am and 6pm.

'Unsung hero' steps down from his role in police authority

A BANKER has been thanked for his loyal dedication to the Kent Police Authority after he stepped down from his role.

Steve Salt, from Brenzett, was chair of the audit and governance committee since he joined the authority in 2005.

His tenure in the role included agreeing the police budget and helping to ensure a four-year savings plan amounting to £50m.

Mr Salt joined the authority after a 35 year banking career, but is now taking his second retirement.

A spokesman said: "Steve Salt is one of the unsung heroes of the Kent Police Authority. He has given up countless hours and has gone over and above what is expected to protect the public purse."

"He has even cancelled his holidays to deal with authority matters. His knowledge has made a real difference to the financial decisions that the authority has endorsed."

"He has been a critical friend to Kent Police and has constantly kept an eye on their performance in east Kent on behalf of the public."

Steve Salt said: "I've mixed feelings about going. It's a joy to leave behind commitments but it has been a real privilege and pleasure to work with so many professional officers and staff."

"I'm confident that I am leaving behind a force with sound finances and I'm looking forward to my second retirement."

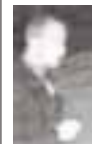

The Kent Police Authority will cease to exist after November 22.

ART

Cash woes leave Ebbsfleet 'white horse' statue at the starting gate

Exclusive by Marijke Cox

MULTI-million pound plans to build a giant white horse in Ebbsfleet – expected to be the most significant public art piece since Angel of the North – have been stalled by the economic downturn.

Despite a fundraising campaign looking for parties to invest in the project, efforts have proved fruitless with a lack of sponsors coming forward to help pay for the building of the 50-metre sculpture.

The horse, designed by Turner-prize winner Mark Wallinger, is expected to cost several million pounds according to those behind the project, although speculation surrounding the final price suggests a figure closer to £12 million.

Wallinger fought off stiff competition from other internationally-acclaimed artists to win the high-profile Ebbsfleet Landmark Project (ELP) in 2009 with his ambitious design.

His horse will be 33 times larger than the Riviera Red racehorse on which he based the sculpture, and will look out over the new Ebbsfleet Valley development at Springhead.

It has been dubbed the Angel of the South and is likely to be the biggest and most significant public work of art since the development of Antony Gormley's Angel of the North in Gateshead.

Part-funded by Eurostar, Land Securities, and London and Continental Railways, Mr Wallinger's sculpture design was originally due to be completed in time for the London Olympics.

Planning permission was obtained in April, 2010, from Gravesham Borough Council, but this is likely to have to be renewed next year.

A spokesman for Land Securities said a committee of interested parties was still trying

FIELD OF DREAMS: Artist Mark Wallinger's white horse design was chosen in January, 2009, ahead of four other entries to be the Ebbsfleet Landmark Project to secure funding for the project.

"We're hoping things will pick up," he said. "The planning permission runs out next year, but we don't envisage any problems getting that renewed. We funded the design, but we now have to find parties to fund the build. The economic downturn has stalled it."

He admitted the sculpture would be more expensive than initially thought.

"We have never disclosed exactly how much it will be, but it will be several million," he said.

He was unable to give a time as to when the sculpture might be built, but said it would still go ahead.

Few other details have been released about the project in stark contrast to the global wave of publicity that followed the unveiling of the horse as the winner of the ELP in January, 2009.

The commission was announced in 2007, aimed at attracting internationally-acclaimed artists.

Five designs were commissioned, but Mr Wallinger came through victorious with his ambitious horse design.

The aim of the project is to provide a high-profile symbol for Ebbsfleet Valley, the Gravesham and Dartford communities and the north Kent region to help identify Ebbsfleet Valley and Ebbsfleet International station.

At 40-50m high, the landmark will be one of the biggest artworks in the UK, comparable in scale to the Statue of Liberty.

ARSONIST Leroy Brown, 34, of Uxbridge Road, west London, who blackmailed a London property developer and started fires to target his victim's business and family has been jailed for an indeterminate sentence, and will serve a minimum of eight-and-a-half years. In May, 2011, Brown started a fire at what he mistakenly thought was the victim's parents home in Rainham. Ten days later, the victim's sister's house, also in Rainham, was targeted by Brown.

RENOWNED celebrity chef Angela Hartnett has visited Shepherd Neame's Faversham brewery to find out about women's role in brewing for the BBC Two show The Great British Food Revival. The show sees chefs on a quest across the UK to investigate forgotten food traditions. Canterbury-born Hartnett was hosted by head brewer Richard Frost, who coached her through a brew of Spitfire Premium Kentish Ale. The show will be broadcast in the autumn.

➔ Ride fall girl 'improving'

A four-year-old girl who suffered critical injuries falling from a ride at Chessington World of Adventures is making "small improvements". Jessica Blake, from Sheerness, suffered a fractured skull, a bleed on the brain and broken ribs after falling 14ft from queue for the Tomb Blaster ride on June 7. She is being treated at St George's Hospital in south London. Officials from the Health and Safety Executive are currently investigating the circumstances surrounding the incident. The ride has been closed since the accident.

Strawberry fields forever as farm continues Wimbledon love affair

IF you are lucky enough to have tickets to watch Great Britain's big hope Andy Murray play at Wimbledon this weekend, you'll be able to enjoy the action while tucking into some of the 30 tonnes of Kentish strawberries on sale.

Over Wimbledon fortnight more than two million of the berries will be available with a dollop of cream, just 24 hours after being picked at Hugh Lowe Farms in Mereworth.

The farm near Maidstone has netted the position of chosen provider to the world-famous championships for the past two decades without a break, which really does give a new meaning to strawberry fields forever.

The farm is run by Marion Regan, 51, with husband Jon, 53, and its south-facing slopes means it is ideal for catching just the right amount of sun for the Elsanta variety.

The teams of 35 pickers are told to only select the very best for Wimbledon – and it's done at the very last minute so they are as fresh as possible. They have to be a good shade of scarlet over the entire surface before they can be served up to tennis fans.

Mrs Regan said: "We use a five-hectare section of the farm just for the Wimbledon strawberries. We also supply raspberries which go in the puddings in the corporate boxes. In all we have about 130 hectares of strawberries.

"Our strawberries are among the best in Britain – they are sweet, juicy and fresh and we ensure they go straight in to their own punnets, which cuts down dramatically on human handling.

"A medium-sized strawberry is what we are looking for, and they have to be soft enough to cut in half with a teaspoon, while balancing them on your knee."

The lorries head for the tennis courts on a daily basis and Mrs Regan said they haven't had any problems making the deliveries.

She said: "The weather this year has been extremely kind to us – our strawberries have peaked just as the right time for the Wimbledon fortnight. That means we have also had a good year for flavour and size. It could not be better, we are delighted."

Handshake heralded as 'wonderful' moment by Mountbatten's daughter

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

EARL Mountbatten's daughter has heralded the historic meeting of the Queen with Martin McGuinness as a "wonderful" moment.

Patricia Knatchbull, 2nd Countess Mountbatten, of New House, Mersham, lost her 14-year-old son Nicholas Knatchbull along with her father and mother-in-law in the IRA bomb which claimed four lives on August 27, 1979.

But she told the Daily Telegraph the meeting of the Queen with Mr McGuinness, a former IRA commander, had her support.

"I think it's wonderful," she said. "I'm hugely grateful we have come to a point where we can behave responsibly and positively."

The countess, 88, was badly injured by the bomb which blew up a fishing boat on which her family were enjoying a day out off the coast of County Sligo, Ireland.

Along with Nicholas, those who died in the attack were Lord Mountbatten, 79, and Paul Maxwell, 15, a local boat boy. Another passenger, the Dowager Lady Doreen Brabourne, 83, died the day after the attack of her injuries.

Countess Mountbatten's husband, John Knatchbull 7th Baron Brabourne, and her other twin son, Timothy, also received terrible injuries in the attack.

Thomas McMahon, 63, was given four life sentences for placing a bomb on board the Shadow V, but was released from prison in 1998, under the terms of the Good Friday Agreement.

But the person who detonated the remote controlled device has never been brought to justice.

An IRA statement released at the time said: "The IRA claim responsibility for the execution of Lord Louis Mountbatten. This operation is one

GRABBING HISTORY:

The Queen met Martin McGuinness, a former commander of the IRA, during her Northern Ireland visit this week of the discriminate ways we can bring to the attention of the English people the continuing occupation of our country."

Thirty years after the murders Timothy Knatchbull, who suffered shrapnel wounds and damage to his eye, admitted the death of his twin Nicholas has haunted him throughout his life.

He wrote a book – From A Clear Blue Sky – which reflects on his loss. He describes the book as "saying goodbye to Nick".

In it he states: "We were all so completely crushed by the bomb, we needed not just to survive, but to signal to others that we were surviving."

"And when we were all so devastated it was hard to say, 'I'm hurting, I need more time, more energy, more support, more listening'."

"The one thing I wanted most was to give support and strength to my beloved family at the worst time in our lives – and the first way I felt I could do that was to show that I was all right, I was coping, not to worry about me."

"I knew they were very worried I might not be able to carry on as a lone twin, so I automatically felt I should give them the all-clear signal as soon as I was out of hospital."

"I fooled them but, worse, I fooled myself. My emotional and mental scars were terrible and took years to come out because I clamped down on them and kept them from view."

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Burglars steal medals

MEDALS and memorabilia have been swiped from a home in Aylesford. Police are appealing for help in tracking down the distinctive items stolen during a burglary in Eccles. The crime happened on June 12 in Mackenders Lane. Property including military medals, a pocket watch and two chiming clocks were reported to have been stolen, as was a medal the victim was awarded for service in the fire brigade, and a pocket watch in recognition of his service.

➔ Kids back cigarette ban

A GROUP of Kent youngsters have backed calls for the introduction of plain tobacco packaging in a bid to cut the number of under 18s starting smoking. The group, called REframe, met to have their say in response to a government consultation. Every year, 340,000 children in England try smoking for the first time – and 200,000 under-16s become regular smokers. REframe is supported by Kent Youth County Council and Mid Kent College Students' Union.

➔ Police chief short reign

ANN Barnes has been re-elected for the seventh consecutive year as chair of the soon-to-be-defunct Kent Police Authority. Her election follows the annual meeting of the authority – which holds the local police force to account.

Her final year will be relatively short-lived however. In November it will be disbanded and replaced by the Police and Crime Commissioner, who will be elected by the public.

HEALTH

PFI hospital trust admits to 'difficult' future but plans merger of services

A HOSPITAL trust has denied it is spiralling into financial crisis because of its Private Finance Initiative (PFI).

Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust, which runs Darent Valley Hospital, admitted the future "looked difficult", but said it was not in the same position as South London Healthcare, which faces insolvency due to its crippling "NHS mortgage".

Under PFI, private firms pay to build hospitals, with the NHS left to pay a mortgage-like fee over 30 years.

A Dartford and Gravesham NHS spokesman said in recent years the trust had balanced its books and ended last year with a £393,000 surplus.

He stated that while things were difficult financially, moves to merge with Medway NHS Foundation Trust would ensure the future of services.

"We have balanced the books for the last few years and ended last year with a small surplus of £393,000," he said.

"However, the upcoming financial position for the NHS means the future looks more difficult, and to maintain services going forward we think an integration with another trust is the best way of protecting existing services, and indeed building on others."

"The staff at Darent Valley are innovative, flexible and totally committed to high-quality patient care."

"Although the economic landscape is challenging, the organisation has clear financial plans to create efficiencies, maintain its income and keep tight control of its costs. This means the trust can continue to serve the community and invest in new patient services."

Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS

Trust, which runs the brand new £228 million Pembury Hospital, is also tied up in a PFI, with repayments of £1.7m month from a monthly income of £30m – with the repayments continuing for 30 years.

South London Healthcare formed in 2009, when Queen Mary's Sidcup NHS Trust, Queen Elizabeth Hospital NHS Trust and Bromley Hospitals NHS Trust merged to create a single hospital on several sites.

These include Princess Royal University in Bromley and Queen Mary's in Sidcup.

South London Healthcare is spending 14 per cent of its income on repayments to a PFI, and it is now insolvent.

The Government could appoint an administrator to take over the running of the hospital.

How the years fly by: never-before-seen aerial photos reveal a century of change around Kent

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

MORE than 15,000 aerial photographs from across the UK, taken nearly 100 years ago, are to go online for the first time.

And as the images on this page show, the photos provide a fascinating snapshot of our county.

Among the areas captured are Chatham, Folkestone, Dover, Maidstone, Lydd and St Margaret's Bay.

Britain from Above is the new website – www.britainfromabove.org.uk – which is run by English Heritage and the Royal Commissions on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland and Wales.

It features some of the oldest and most valuable images of the Aerofilms Collection, a unique and important archive of more than one million aerial photographs taken between 1919-2006.

The photographs featuring on the website date from 1919-53, and have gone through a painstaking process of conservation and cataloguing. Due to their age and fragility, many of the earliest plate glass negatives were close to being lost forever.

The Aerofilms Collection was acquired for the nation in 2007, when the company was facing financial difficulties.

Anna Eavis, head of archive at English Heritage, said: "The Aerofilms Collection embodies all that is exciting about aerial photography. We are pleased the items have been given safe, long-term homes, and that each of the organisations involved has been enriched by their addition."

By the end of the project in 2014, 95,000 images taken between 1919-53 will be available online, showing the changing face of modern Britain.

Chelsea Flower Show may be fading from your memory, but Jacksons Show Gardens are still here to inspire you...

Now in to the third year the Show Gardens have proved to be an attraction for visitors to the Kent Fencing company's display area, as news has got around about these inspirational displays. In the first year the project was hailed as a "mini Chelsea Flower Show" as people in the Kent area were treated to visions of loveliness more associated with the big RHS flower shows, rather than something you would expect to see in a local fencing centre.

Two of the seven existing gardens on show at Stowting have been replaced with brand new designs; these are this year's winners of the national garden design competition run by Jacksons. Entrants come from all over the country and even the continent.

The idea was thought up by Jacksons' marketing manager, Louise Tomlin: "We wanted to create more than just a fencing display. By running the national competition for garden designers to create show gardens that use Jacksons and other high quality suppliers' products, we have provided something for people to visit to get inspiration for their own garden projects. What's more, the gardens are available for people to visit all year round, rather than the few days that show gardens can be seen at the large flower shows. I am really excited about the two new gardens this year, as in the previous years the quality of the entries we had, made it very difficult to choose the winners, but we got there and now they are open and ready for visitors."

The winners are: Natural Reflections by Alison Coxhead and Within the Weave by Kari Beardsell.

Alison, a local Kent designer revealed that she did not need any encouragement to include Jacksons' products within her design. "I use them all the time and even have them in my own garden," she explained. "I try to persuade my customers to include Jacksons' fencing, gates and other garden products because using cheaper, inferior products is a mistake in the long run.

"It's important to me that the gardens I have designed stay looking good, which means my clients will enjoy them for years to come. By specifying quality products I know that they will still be looking good 25 years plus later - and that means my work is still going to be looking good, too."

Featuring in the new gardens will be the amazing new Woven panel by Jacksons, there is a clue in the name of Kari Beardsell's 'Within the Weave'. The Woven panels are catching on fast and have been an instant success with almost everyone who has seen them.

The five other gardens: The Fragrant Front Garden by Justine Jobson, The Chill Out Garden by Helen Elks-Smith, The Paradise Garden by Mary Ann Le May, Jacksons goes to the Seaside by Philippa O'Brien and The Float Garden by Silver and Gold RHS medal winning Heather Appleton have been refurbished to give them a new look, and if the last two years are anything to go by, this means there will be a stunning selection of show gardens to view from May 2012, onwards.

The gardens are open to visitors at Jacksons HQ in Stowting during the company's usual opening hours. To find out more about Jacksons Products and visiting the gardens log on to jacksons-fencing.co.uk or call 01233 750393.

CAMPAIGN

Independent review says a hub airport would be too late to make a difference

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE case against a Thames Estuary airport is growing as fresh calls are made to abandon the controversial proposals and focus on existing runway capacity.

An independent report commissioned by council and business leaders found the proposed hub airport was unlikely to solve the South East's aviation problems in the foreseeable future.

Instead, it found that expanding other airports such as Stansted, Southend, and Manston in Thanet, could address short-term business needs, while an increase of flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and London City airports could create "significant potential".

'Mixed-mode' flying, where runways are used for take-offs and landings at the same time, would create an additional 20 million passengers a year at Heathrow, said the report.

Authors Parsons Brinckerhoff, a global consulting firm, said: "Due to a wide range of issues including cost, air space management, the time it would take to build, and the impact it would have on the current Heathrow site, a new hub airport in the Thames Estuary is not a feasible solution."

Kent's leaders have always argued that existing capacity should be utilised and this latest report, which was presented to the South East Local Enterprise Partnership, will come as a welcome addition to the campaign.

The report also controversially suggested additional runways should be built at existing sites, despite mass opposition to a third runway at Heathrow – something the Government recently hinted at re-examining.

"If we were designing an airport system from scratch, or had the planning freedoms or financial capabilities of some emerging economies then it would be easy to say that, yes, a new hub airport away from major conurbations with plenty of available capacity would be the right decision for the South East and the UK as a whole," the report stated.

"We are not, however, starting from scratch. We have invested heavily in the sites at Heathrow and Gatwick and need to ensure the operators at both airports are able to respond to the demand being generated by their customers, the airlines.

"Parsons Brinckerhoff strongly recommends that capacity issues need to be addressed in the next five years as waiting 12 to 15 years (best case) for a new hub airport will be too late. By that stage the UK will have lost too much ground to European competitors to justify the huge investment."

The airport plans include the construction of an international transport hub on Grain by Lord Foster or on reclaimed land in the estuary by Boris Johnson, dubbed Boris Island. Both would cost £50bn-£70bn.

This report, which will be considered in the upcoming government review into aviation, came as the London Assembly, part of the Greater London Authority, called for the Mayor of London to abandon his plans.

Members called it a "simplistic and ill-conceived vanity project" and warned it would have a devastating effect on the west London economy, with up to 100,000 jobs at risk should Heathrow be forced to close to make way for a new estuary hub.

MP for Rochester and Strood Mark Reckless joined campaigners last week to raise awareness of the fight.

"There is a large basket of options for greater runway capacity for the South East, all of which make more sense economically and environmentally than a 'pie in the sky' estuary airport," he said.

"When the government produces its paper we must use it to kill off any estuary airport option once and for all in favour of options which make economic and environmental sense."

HOME AND AWAY: Tales of wartime evacuations would be welcomed at the newly created website

HERITAGE

WWII survivors asked to share their memories of the 'total war' waged against Nazi Germany

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

KENT was one of the key home front battle-grounds of World War Two, and a new project aims to preserve memories from the people who lived through the conflict.

Thousands of troops left through Kent for fighting on the Continent – hoping to see the white cliffs when they returned safely home – and Dover was known as Hellfire Corner because of the heavy bombing inflicted on the town. And of course, the Battle of Britain was fought over the county.

Now a new website – www.memoriesofwar.org.uk – has been created to allow people who lived through the war to share their experiences with future generations.

The project, developed by Dr Jane Balshaw and Malin Laudin, has already gathered hundreds of memories from around the world, and the pair are hoping more will come forward.

Dr Balshaw said: "There will come a time when there are fewer and fewer people who lived through this, and it is important we retain these stories for future generations.

"No one story about being evacuated or one story about being in the Land Army is the same.

"World War Two was the first time Britain experienced total war and it is really important that we remember the past."

The website contains more than 180 contributions so far, which have been collated over the past two years with the help of students at the University of Greenwich, which has a campus at Medway Maritime.

The pair hope it will act as an educational resource for schoolchildren and bring historical events back to life for those that struggle to relate to events that took place two generations ago.

Dr Balshaw said: "I wanted to make sure all the people who had stories to tell had the chance to tell them. We have had people looking at it from across the whole world."

TALES OF DEAD GERMAN AIRMEN WASHED UP ON THE SHORE, AND ONE SOLDIER'S LONG-DISTANCE ENGAGEMENT...

DOREEN FOREMAN, (centre ballerina) from Margate, was evacuated to Rugeley in Staffordshire as a youngster.

Mrs Foreman spoke of her five years up north which led to her friends picking up an accent, and how her foster mother became a godparent to her daughter after she moved back home.

However, she added: "I remember coming out of Margate railway station, it was a lovely day. The sky – the sky here is so much higher than it is in Rugeley, it's always a low sky there and a bit grey.

"We did have nice days, but nothing like we've got here and the relief when I came out and saw the sea. I thought, 'Oh, home at last', it was lovely."

KATHLEEN EAMES, (pictured with her family two Frenchmen and an Englishman injured at Dunkirk, from a nearby hospital) was 15 when war broke out. She lived in Farnborough.

She said: "One morning we (Kathleen and her sister) were walking down Dubbindon Lane because it was a very quiet little lane with no footpaths, just two or three gas lamps.

"It was just a quiet little country lane and we were walking down one morning and there were planes fighting overhead, and we had to suddenly dive in to a hedge because of the bullets – to me it was still all quite exciting.

"But then of course, I had no idea then that it was going to last six long years."

Kathleen later joined the Women's Royal Naval Service to avoid working in a factory after her sister suffered bad experiences at a machine works.

JOHN PLUMMER, who lives in Grove Park, London was evacuated to Folkestone in 1939, with his three sisters and brother, only to be separated into different families.

He wrote: "My early experience of a foster-parent was very unpleasant; she being both harsh and unkind. The Major's wife denied food for any alleged slightly misconduct. A strict disciplinarian no less.

"We stayed in Folkestone, about six months when the 'Big Berthas' from Calais opened up and shelled Dover and Folkestone.

"I can still recall dead German seamen being washed up on the beach wearing navy blue jumpers and hexagonal naval headdress."

KENNETH TAYLOR, from Broadstairs was deployed on the Indian Ocean as a Royal Marine after being trained at the Chatham Royal Marine Barracks.

Mr Taylor, who had just left school, volunteered for the Royal Marines after helping out as a member of the Auxiliary Fire Service.

He said: "You volunteered and joined up and all you were looking forward to was to get it finished and get back home again.

"I wrote a letter to my mother and said would you take a ring and take it over to Vera (the girl I was courting) on Boxing Day and to get engaged – I hadn't even asked her! Mum took her ring over and that was it, so that was done from long distance."

'London Eye sized' wind turbines for village

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

SIX wind turbines each the size of the London Eye are planned for a village set in the rolling Kent countryside.

Angry residents are determined to fight plans to build the turbines, after energy giant Ecotricity submitted an application to Shepway District Council to build six huge windmills at Harringe Brooks, near Sellindge.

But villagers fear the wind farm will lead to a drop in house prices, create noise, and ruin the views of the countryside.

This weekend is the council's deadline for comments on the proposals, before town hall officials assess the application.

A council spokesman said on Wednesday that 143 representations had been received so far – 133 objections, one in support, and nine general comments.

Neighbours have set up an action group, Salvation, (Sellindge, Aldington, Lympe Villagers Against Turbines In Our Neighbourhood), which is operating as part of Sellindge Residents' Association.

Tony Bosley from the group said: "We are reversing the right to provide evidence beyond June 30. Ecotricity had two years to provide information and we have only had five weeks."

He said the turbines will be 900m from his home in Court-At-Street, but for some they will be just 500m from the end of their gardens.

Mr Bosley said: "We have moved here for the PROPOSAL: After years fighting off various development proposals, the villagers of Sellindge are now up against turbines almost as tall as the London Eye long term. We have no choice but to fight it.

"Why should we move? Our friends live here. We are backed against the wall and have nowhere to go."

Each turbine would be 125 metres high, just 10m shorter than the London Eye.

The council's website shows the objections to the plans.

Mr J Mann wrote: "I object to this application for monstrous wind turbines in a beautiful part of rural Kent. The effect on the local population will be profound."

Mrs S Maybourne said: "It will ruin the village. So many of us will be able to see these things towering over us. We don't want or need them.

Keep them out at sea or give us solar panels."

Ecotricity say the wind farm would generate enough green energy each year to power the equivalent of 11,800 homes.

Spokesman Nick Osbourne said: "It's taken more than two years of detailed site assessments and environmental studies to get to this stage. The environmental benefits of the proposed wind park are significant, but the area will also receive substantial investment."

"If the plans were to be approved, Ecotricity would allocate a fund of £15,000 every year which local people can apply for, a total of £375,000 over the 25-year lifespan of the site."

"We have received comments of both support and objection from residents. There is often a fear of the unknown with any new development, and misinformation from certain groups can sometimes spread undue concern."

"There is no evidence, for instance, that the proximity of wind turbines has any impact on long-term house prices. As far as noise goes, we would encourage anyone to visit a turbine for themselves – people are often surprised by how quiet they are. However, if residents do still have questions, even at this stage, we urge them to get in touch with us directly."

A council spokesman said it was too early to commit to a timescale for a decision on plans.

Water company faces claims from seaside firms hit by sewage leaks

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

FOUR businesses in Thanet have made compensation claims to Southern Water after the sewage leaks that closed the isle's seas to swimmers last month.

The closures, which cost the local economy tens of thousands of pounds, hit up to 40 traders along the Thanet coast, and some are now seeking compensation because of the closures.

Joss Bay Surfing School boss Dave Melmoth said: "The closure will certainly have an effect this year – we have had a few school lessons cancelled as a result of the pollution."

"We haven't put an exact figure on it yet, but it definitely in the thousands of pounds. Because our business relies on us going into the sea, we were one of the worst hit."

Businesses on the Thanet coast were affected by nine days of sea closures after raw sewage was discharged into the water as the plant at Foreness Point failed to cope with heavy rain.

People were told not to go into the sea at any of Thanet's beaches, or cross the high-tide line on the sand.

A Southern Water spokesman said: "We have had four applications for compensation and are working with them on an individual basis. We continue to work closely with Thanet District Council and the Environment Agency to look at what happened with this incident and what can be done to make improvements for the future."

The water company has joined the Environment Agency in making a U-turn after they both initially turned down an invite to attend a public meeting to discuss the leaks.

Chairman of Thanet District Council's overview and scrutiny panel Cllr Ian Driver was furious when both bodies declined to attend the meeting scheduled for July 17 to discuss the events that led to the problem.

Environment and waterways manager for Kent and south London Alan Cansdale initially said: "I have had advice from our regional solicitor that, given we are undertaking a formal investigation, we should not take part in the meeting."

However, Cllr Driver has now received letters from both the Environment Agency and Southern Water outlining their intention to be represented at the summit.

Cllr Driver said: "I think a lot of local people will be coming along to listen to Southern Water, the Environment Agency and Thanet council about why, when and what will be done to get it right."

"People have a right to know what went wrong and what will be taken to stop this happening again."

"A lot of local people lost money and it was also major environmental disaster. We rely on our beaches for tourism, jobs and trade."

RESCUE

Sheep saved from watery grave

EMERGENCY teams including the Animal Rescue Unit in Faversham were called out on Tuesday afternoon after three sheep fell into the River Beult.

Crews received the call for help at around 1.15pm after the three hapless animals fell into the chilly water near

The expert animal rescue team swung into action and were able to save all three animals without any harm coming to the sheep.

The creatures were then safely reunited with their owner.

Olives oil the way to making the most of climate change

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AN advertising executive is hoping to launch Britain's best olive grove to create top quality extra virgin olive oil.

Neil Davy tests advertising branding for global companies, but said his weekend passion was olives.

So now he is planting 200 olive trees, believed to be among the first in the county, in the hope of creating a small company selling some of the best oil in the country.

The 41-year-old moved in to Huggit's Farm, Tenterden, six years ago with wife Louise, 41. They live there with daughters Kailash, six, and Teagan, two.

He said: "We want to exploit the climate change we are experiencing and realised Kent is the warmest and driest area in the country, so growing good quality olives is a possibility."

After a year-long trial using six olive cultivars, Mr Davy has almost finished planting some 200 trees of three varieties;

OLIVE FARMING: Neil Davy

Frantoio, believed to have originated in Tuscany and known for its hardness and tolerance of cold temperatures; Leccino, which is similar to Frantoio in that it is fruity and peppery on the palate, but its flavour is lighter, more harmonious and subtle; and Maurino, hardy with a delicate, soft and balanced flavour, and an effective cross-pollinator of Leccino.

Mr Davy said: "The warmer weather and lack of fertile soil on the slopes of the five acre field will provide perfect conditions for growing olives."

If the planting experiment proves to be a success, the next stage is production.

He said: "You don't need to have factory-sized equipment. The production can be done in the space of a garage with machinery costing just a few thousand pounds."

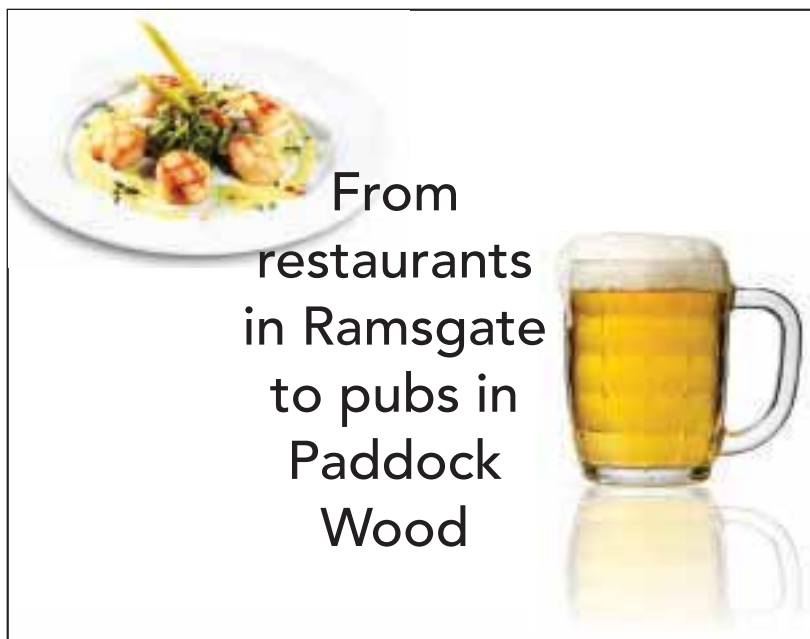

"Our extra virgin olive oil will be more expensive than those in supermarkets, but it will be a much higher quality."

"It will be a bit like buying wine – you can spend a little for lower quality or a little more for much higher quality."

"Our area of Kent is one of the warmest and driest parts of Britain. When we combine that with the anticipated rise in temperatures from global warming, we think commercially grown olives might just have a fighting chance of success at Huggit's Farm."

He said the area is rich in agriculture; in addition to producing the famous salt marsh lamb and a wealth of arable crops, it is also home to some of Britain's most successful and well known vineyards.

Almost 94% of children and young people said living with an Action for Children foster carer had helped them, with 80% saying it had helped them a lot

Do you care?

Do you care?

Every child who comes into foster care is different.

There is no 'typical' child we place. Many have faced extreme difficulties. Some are from minority ethnic populations. Some have a range of special needs or display challenging behaviour. Some are in sibling groups which need to stay together wherever possible. All are looking for safe, caring homes with people like you.

From drivers to café workers to engineers, we help all sorts of people become foster carers, supporting them to transform the lives of the most vulnerable and neglected children and young people.

Fostering myths busted!

With over a quarter of people considering fostering, but almost 60 per cent mistakenly thinking they're not eligible, we want to bust the myths and tackle the many reasons people don't come forward.

If you've considered fostering - but didn't think you'd be eligible, then think again. You can foster!

- ▶ I don't think I'm the right age
- ▶ I'm male
- ▶ I'm gay
- ▶ I don't own my own home
- ▶ I don't have any children
- ▶ I'm single
- ▶ I haven't worked with children or young people
- ▶ I don't think they recruit carers from my ethnicity
- ▶ I can't afford to give up work

We believe the most important thing is that a child or young person is taken care of well. We need all types of carers to reflect the types of children and young people who need a place to stay. If you have experience of working with vulnerable young people, and are committed to transforming children and young people's lives, we want to hear from you.

Why choose Action for Children?

We value our foster carers very highly. Our friendly team will support you, so you can support young people to grow with hope and confidence. We are an experienced UK children's charity who put children at the centre of everything we do. We offer:

- ▶ 24-hour support
- ▶ continuous training and development
- ▶ careful matching
- ▶ regular paid breaks when you need them
- ▶ competitive allowances and fees
- ▶ support groups and social events

Children and young people in your area need foster homes

Could you give children and young people the care and support they need to thrive? If you can offer a safe and caring home, we'll give you excellent training, competitive fees (up to £420 per week), regular planned breaks and 24-hour support.

If you have experience of working with vulnerable young people, a spare room and you're up for the challenges and rewards of transforming a child's life, we want to hear from you.

Seaside festival marks 30th year with world-class acts

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THIS weekend sees the return of the popular Deal Festival, a 10-day celebration of music, dance and theatre starring some of the world's finest performers.

Thousands of people are expected to attend the event which is spread across a number of different venues in the Dover district from June 29-July 8.

This year's line-up boasts the world premiere of composer Julian Phillips' Battle, a dance and music battle between the Aurora Orchestra and French break-dancers at Dover town hall, as well as an open-air production of Shakespeare's As You Like It at The Salutation Gardens, Sandwich.

Harry Potter star Miriam Margolyes, who has a house in St Margaret's Bay, will perform her one-woman, Olivier Award-nominated production Dickens' Women – which is currently on its year-long worldwide tour – at St George's Church in Deal.

Other events include The Barber of Seville opera in the grounds of Northbourne Park School in Betteshanger; a set from three-time winners of the BBC folk awards LAU; and a performance by classical saxophonists.

Local talent will also entertain the masses, with performances from the Kent County Youth Orchestra, and the English premiere of Little Book of Monsters, performed by 1,000 east Kent children. Street theatre, music-theatre and family entertainment are also on the bill.

A community event will see residents given the chance to put their questions to a panel including Dover and Deal MP Charlie Elphicke and chair of the Deal Society Stephanie Hayman, at the Big Deal Question event. Members of the public can raise any issues about the town they want.

Organisers said the 2012 festival promises to be special, particularly as this year marks its 30th birthday.

"Deal and Dover are special places – with wonderfully varied communities, sights to see and fascinating history – and our festival celebrates that uniqueness," said a spokesperson.

ART

Candid Emin opens up to Fry at Turner gallery talks

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

TRACEY Emin would be dead by now if it were not for her art which she says "keeps me alive constantly".

The Margate artist made the revelation to actor Stephen Fry during a public talk at the Turner Contemporary gallery in her hometown of Margate.

The gallery is currently given over to the exhibition She Lay Down Deep Beneath the Sea, a series of new works by Emin.

During the event Emin spoke of her upbringing up in Kent, her art, and a vision for the future of the town.

She told Fry: "I'm a totally serious artist and all I have ever had in my life is art. I left school when I was 13, and went back when I was 15 for a few months.

"If it hadn't been for art, I would probably have been dead by now. Art is like my lover that keeps me alive constantly."

Emin was raped as a teenager, didn't have the grades to make it into art college, and worked at Dreamland for free, but the artist said she still had a love for Margate.

She said about being back at the Kent seaside: "I never thought there would be an amazing art gallery in Margate where I am having an exhibition; where I am showing when I'm nearly 50, when I'm still alive; when everything is positive.

"I realise how lucky I am."

The 48-year-old artist has had strong critics of her work ever since her 'bed installation' which was shortlisted for the Turner Prize in 1999.

However, despite a mixed response from the art world, she became professor of drawing at the Royal Academy last year, and told the audience she held her first lesson in Margate.

Emin, who went to King Ethelbert School and attended Medway College, also spoke of her vision for the town and said art and culture was the stimulus Margate needed.

She said: "What I see is wherever art goes, regeneration goes. What I would like in Margate is a film festival. I'd like to have a massive antiques market that happens maybe twice a year and I would like to see more hotels.

"The last thing I want to see when I drive into Margate is Tesco. We want to see Margate in big flashing letters."

She spoke with passion about her hopes for the town, calling it "sexy", and told of her intention to make "make Margate look cool".

Emin added: "I'd like to see the Lido regenerated, Tony Savage to be re-born and playing the organ, and I'd like to see the beauty contest start again. It's possible, we just need the money to do it, that's all."

Fry said to her: "You are the most vulnerable artist. I don't mean this in a crude way, but you've opened your legs to the public in the sense of your sexuality, your sexual history and your femininity.

"It's very much part of who you are as an artist, which is extremely brave and tender."

The QI presenter added: "Margate has the good fortune of being the hometown of Tracey Emin.

When the people from around the world come to England, they should come to Margate. I think there should always be an Emin here."

TECHNOLOGY

82-year-old IT whizz happy to help OAPs get connected

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

A TECHNOLOGY expert who has spent his life working in electronics is still giving computer lessons – at the grand age of 82.

Norman Heath, (pictured), from Biddenden, near Ashford, holds lessons in his front room for fellow villagers, and also helps neighbours with any technology problems they may have.

Fourteen people from the village attended his latest series of classes, which taught the basics of how to use computers and the internet to older people who have struggled to embrace the world wide web.x

Mr Heath, who lives with his daughter and son-in-law, also set up the Weald and Kent Computer Club to help those taking lessons stay in touch.

He said: "I enjoy helping older people in rural areas get to learn how to use computers, and the ages tend to range between 55 and 70.

"By the end of the first year's course we had more people asking if they could take part, so it was decided to have another batch of classes and it's kept going since then."

Mr Heath has been running the classes since 2002, but has spent his life working with technology since the age of 16, having been an electronics engineer who helped build the first TV sets after World War Two.

He also installed television sets at the various royal wedding venues including Princess Margaret's, and constructed sets at the Queen's annual OBE ceremony at St Paul's Cathedral in the 1960s.

Mr Heath worked in television development for nearly 20 years and held other technical roles before he retired aged 60.

He said: "I am interested in technology and hardware, and people who have problems with their digital cameras or computers can come to me and I'll try and sort it out."

"I have a little workshop in the garage, and we're hoping to have another lot of computer lessons in the autumn. We'll teach them in the sitting room, and we've even got space in the dining room, too."

Mr Heath runs classes as a volunteer at computer company, Training Highway. The organisation said he is a great asset.

Managing director Phil Birch said: "Norman is one of our most valuable, long-standing volunteers and has helped many people over the years including allowing us to run training courses and computer clinics at his home in Biddenden."

"He is of the old school where things don't get thrown away if they can be mended."

Its products include PV solar panels under the Government's FITS payment arrangement, solar thermal hot water panels, air source heat pumps, energy monitor meters, low-energy lighting and spray-foam roof insulation. Solar Air UK has saved its customers thousands of pounds on their ever-increasing energy bill - and whose energy bills are going down these days?!

Solar Air UK doesn't only sell and install for their customers, it also installs for a large number of other companies across the UK. It is the eighth biggest installer in the country, with more than 5,000 installations completed to date. Solar Air UK - unlike any other UK solar company - has the UK rights for a PV solarpanel coating that can increase the output of a solar panel by up to 18 per cent, meaning any customer buying PV Solar from Solar Air UK will get a better return on their investment. The company can also coat already-fitted panels. For further details, visit www.solarairuk.com or phone 0800 917 6859.

Further to its success in the PV industry, Solar Air UK has now also opened a training centre in Hersden, near Canterbury. The centre gained City & Guilds-approval status in May and offers a range of electrical, renewable-energy and health-and-safety courses at competitive prices. Courses including wiring regulations, inspection and testing, solar PV, solar thermal and heat pumps are available, as well as domestic energy assessment (EPC) and the forthcoming Green Deal Advisor qualification. The spacious two-storey unit houses two main meeting rooms and working test rigs. For further details, visit www.sotrain.co.uk or phone 01227 713 586.

£1.2m appeal to save white cliffs for future generations

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THEY have stood as a symbol of home throughout the centuries, acting as the nation's frontier at the gateway to England.

But one stretch of the famous White Cliffs of Dover – and arguably the most iconic – remains in private hands, meaning it could one day be at the mercy of inappropriate development.

In a bid to secure its future, the National Trust has launched a £1.2 million fundraising appeal to buy the stretch after the current owner offered to sell it to the conservation charity.

The Trust already looks after and manages the white cliffs, with the exception of the 1.35km sweep between the visitor centre and South Foreland lighthouse which overlooks the port.

Charity bosses say it will complete the “missing link” of coastline, uniting a stretch of more than five miles.

Assistant director, operations, at National Trust for the South East, Nic Durston, said it would allow the trust to protect the historical landmark.

ICONIC: White Cliffs of Dover

“We’ve been given the opportunity to acquire this stretch by the current owner,” he said.

“We already own a lot of Dover’s white cliffs and it means we can conserve this wonderful landscape for the nation.”

He said that if an unsympathetic owner took control of the cliff it could damage the land.

“They could take an inappropriate approach to development or reduce public access.”

“While this section of is not under threat at the moment, if it was under an unsympathetic owner that couldn’t be guaranteed,” he added.

And he pointed the recent 100ft ‘Roy the Redeemer’ statue of England football boss Roy Hodgson that was temporarily placed on the cliffs by bookie Paddy Power.

“What that kind of thing invites is heavy machinery coming onto the cliffs and damaging the landscape,” he said.

The appeal is the charity’s biggest ever coastal fundraiser, with £1.2m needed by the end of the year.

Historian and television presenter Dan Snow has thrown his weight behind the appeal.

“For me it’s simple; the White Cliffs of Dover are one of the country’s greatest and most iconic landmarks,” he said.

COMPETITION

Win a VIP visit to Tate Modern and a night at London's luxurious Hilton Tower Bridge Hotel

WE are offering one lucky reader a VIP weekend to see Edvard Munch: The Modern Eye at Tate Modern plus a luxurious stay at the Hilton Tower Bridge Hotel.

Few other modern artists are better known and yet less understood than Norwegian painter Edvard Munch (1863-1944).

This exhibition examines the artist's work from the 20th century, including 60 paintings, many from the Munch Museum in Oslo, with a rare showing of his work in film and photography.

Munch is often seen as a 19th century Symbolist painter, but this exhibition shows how he engaged with modernity and was inspired by the everyday life outside of his studio, such as street scenes and incidents in the media – including The House is Burning 1925-7.

The show also examines how Munch repeated a single motif over a long period of time to re-work it, as can be seen in his most celebrated works, such as The Sick Child 1885-1927 and The Girls on the Bridge 1902-27.

To celebrate the opening of this exciting exhibition, Tate Modern is giving one lucky winner two free tickets to see it, a souvenir exhibition catalogue and poster.

What's more, the lucky person will be able to make a weekend of it with a luxurious night's stay and breakfast at the Hilton Tower Bridge Hotel.

KENT REMEMBERED

ONE AND ONLY: The Garden of England has been formed over the centuries by a unique series of factors

Unique heritage that's shaped our landscape

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE reason why Kent retains its unique countryside and architecture from past centuries is outlined in a new book about the growth of England.

Painstakingly researched and written by Harry Mount, a former Daily Telegraph writer and New York correspondent, How England made the English: From Hedgerows to Heathrow describes the national characteristics behind the look of the landscape.

It describes a population with, "a liking for old things, for smallness and gentleness; a preference for accidental, natural beauty over grand human designs".

Published by Viking Books it describes these shores as, "the most geographically varied small country in the world (which) has produced its most idiosyncratic people; and the English character and the landscape of that small country are inextricably linked".

Kent's brickwork, architecture, soil, crops, castles and churches are all featured along with its closeness to France – with consequences in times of war and peace.

One unique aspect of the county's heritage is inheritance laws which differed from the rest of the country from the 11th century until 1925, when the Administration of Estates Act standardised regulations.

The rest of England followed a law known as 'primogeniture' – where land passed to the oldest son – whereas in Kent an Anglo-Saxon law saw it equally distributed between all sons.

Known as 'gavelkind' – an old Kentish word – it was also prevalent in Wales and Ireland.

William the Conqueror is given credit for letting Kent keep its own laws as elsewhere he introduced Norman-style regulations to reinforce his royal position, although why is not clear.

But the rule led to smaller local fields and holdings, which to this day means there are few big estates, country houses, parks or grand landowning estates compared to elsewhere in the country.

The smaller plots of land also meant it was more enclosed, so there is little of the large open-field farming which is a major feature of the landscape in other counties.

The book also describes how Wealden clay produced the right growing conditions for orchards, and that the loamy soils of Thanet are ideal for fruit growing, while the stiffer clays between Whitstable and Canterbury are harder to cultivate – so the ancient woodland of Blean still survives.

As the closest thing to a frontier England possesses, Kent also needed to be well fortified and as early as 2AD the Roman Classis Britannica – or British Fleet – was based at Lympne and Dover.

Today, more castles exist in Kent than any other southern county, with Rochester boasting the highest keep in England.

Canterbury's place as the home of the Church of England is also the result of this proximity to foreign parts.

When Pope Gregory dispatched St Augustine to this country in 597AD, he made the city his foothold and eventual base and there are still remains of 10 seventh century churches built by the saint or his converts in the county.

And when cathedrals started to be built, easy import of top-quality French stone meant the central tower of Canterbury cathedral has a core of half a million bricks wrapped in limestone from around Caen, Normandy.

Publisher Viking said: "The book spans new England as well as the rolling hills and patchwork landscape of Tourist Board England: the hedge-funder's taste for Victorian terraced houses turned into minimalist white boxes and the steel reinforced concrete that changed the English city horizon."

"In England the English have been shaped by our weather geology and geography; by being a coal rich, northerly island off the edge of a vast land mass, moored between the Atlantic and the North Sea, warmed by the Gulf Stream."

Powerful case for nuclear plant

Damian Collins, Folkestone and Hythe MP, says Romney Marsh needs a nuclear power station for jobs today and to secure our youths' future

THE people of Romney Marsh need and deserve good-quality jobs, now and in the future, and recent news suggests there is cause for optimism.

The operator of Dungeness B power station, EDF Energy, has confirmed it is in talks with the National Grid and the Government about extending the plant's operating life, meaning it will be producing electricity for at least another 10 years from now.

This will be welcomed by the hundreds of people who are employed both directly and indirectly by the station, while also giving us more time to press the case for a next-generation Dungeness C plant.

In the two years since I became Member of Parliament for Folkestone and Hythe, I have probably spent more time and effort on this issue than any other.

Nuclear power is absolutely crucial to the local economy and the many jobs that are dependent on it.

The position of the Government is that it is a difficult site because of the habitats regulations, but that the "door remains open" to building a new station there.

I believe the right balance has to be struck between protecting the habitats and the future livelihoods of those on Romney Marsh.

For the last 50 years, the power stations have lived alongside habitats which are part of an evolving landscape. The shingle has regenerated so successfully that the land itself now has a very high designation protection.

The site where a new nuclear station would go has been marked out, on land which has already been largely disturbed where the first two were built.

The decommissioning of Dungeness A will also free up about seven hectares which could be used as a construction site to support the building of a new C station, complete with an existing access road.

The loss of protected natural habitat, which is the sole objection of Natural England to any new build, could be therefore be avoided.

Thousands of jobs would be created in the construction of a new facility and I have already asked the Government to review the advice it was given and look at the case again.

I will reinforce this message in my upcoming meeting with the new secretary of state for energy, Ed Davey.

There is also the issue of building a nuclear waste storage facility, which Shepway District Council is consulting on. We should have this debate, but I believe we can do better for the future of the Marsh.

If it is built, my concern is it will be enormously disruptive to the economy.

I believe the right balance has to be struck between habitat and the people

It would be the equivalent of building the Channel Tunnel again, but instead of a high-speed rail connection to the Continent, it will just be a hole in the ground.

At present 70 per cent of waste is currently above the ground in Cumbria, so it is hard to see why the Government would go to the trouble and expense of transporting it to the other side of the country.

It would also need to be built some distance inland away from the protected areas, not near the existing power stations, plus no jobs would be created until the start of construction in 2025, and when it started operating in 2040.

What Romney Marsh needs is a new power station while attracting other companies to come and invest here, to create jobs and opportunities for our residents today and to secure the future for our young people.

KOS COMMENT

Don't let travel chaos spoil your excitement

TRAVEL during the Olympics is without a doubt going to be hellish for a lot of people.

And those who missed out on tickets and find themselves stuck on a packed train or gridlocked motorway are likely to feel particularly resentful.

But however awful the travel situation, the excitement should counteract that. With Kent hosting the Paralympic road cycling and several training camps, the buzz is going to be inescapable.

We're on the doorstep of the biggest sporting event in the world, we have two stopovers for the Torch which is spending more time here than any other county, and we've two residents who have qualified for the Games. Can't we put up with a bit of travel chaos?

Festival season is here

KENT'S festival season has officially started at the Hop Farm, to be closely followed by Lounge on the Farm.

Or for those who prefer to avoid dancing in muddy fields, Wimbledon is back and can be enjoyed at home. Either way, there'll be something to help forget last weekend's football pain.

Why buy a new kitchen when you can just change your doors!!

Transform your kitchen with new made to measure doors and accessories, less mess, less time and a fraction of the cost of a complete kitchen.

Cameron is distracting us

DAVID Cameron has again sought to blame the poor and unemployed for the problems of this nation. He claims there's a culture of entitlement among those who claim housing benefit, especially the under 25s it seems.

A single person who's unemployed isn't better off than someone on minimum wage. Over 35s in Shepway are given around £80pcm less than can be earned on the minimum wage, even when you take into account free prescriptions. Those under 35, because of changes to housing benefit, are given a further £150pcm less. Taking housing benefit from under 25s will mean they have about £345pcm to live on, including paying rent and council tax.

This is not about a culture of entitlement. David Cameron is relying on two things. Firstly, the poor and unemployed won't vote as they feel every party is lying to them.

Secondly, people want someone to blame for their suffering. David Cameron has no intention of making his rich cronies accept their share of the blame, so he is using this as a distraction to divide and conquer the public.

The only real solution to this financial crisis is growth and an end to tax avoidance and evasion. The best way to do this, instead of throwing money at the banks, is to give people the means to improve their finances and to spend, by offering cheap loans direct to the public to help them get out of debt permanently.

Building needs to be prudent

"ASHFORD needs more houses" and "hard choices must be made" are Ashford council's repeated response to criticism of its housing strategy. Is it true?

The council claims to have created 7,000 new jobs. Official figures show Ashford has only 400 more jobs now than it had in 2004. With an increase of 7,800 in population over that period, jobs haven't kept pace with people.

The council is scrapping its housing targets to use a jobs-led approach to forecast housing needs. The right approach, but on past jobs record housing needs will be modest. With 500 long-term empty houses and more than 14,500 new houses in the pipeline for completion by 2030, the council's jobs-based forecast of 14,470 new houses needed by then will be met.

The developers of Cheesemans Green have been offered a government sweetener of £23,000 per house to start building 100 houses earlier than market forces dictate. Supply will soon exceed demand, pushing down local house values.

The council says extra housing at Chilmington and Tenterden is needed as Ashford's economy will out-perform not just Kent, but the South East and the rest of the UK. Based on the past, this is a wildly optimistic and totally irresponsible basis for promoting developments of that scale. We all want Ashford to prosper, attract inward investment, its residents to have better jobs, better education and be better off. But just building houses will not make this happen.

The argument is clear. Be realistic and prudent with our environment. Build the houses in the pipeline, but on old sites not green fields, create real new jobs and postpone irreversible and unnecessary development until we know where the economy is going.

Gay marriage a waste of time

CAN I reply to last week's letters and Charlotte Stuart's reference to gay marriage. It is my belief this small minority should not be allowed the sacrament of marriage. Why?

1) For thousands of years the principle of marriage was a man and woman making a contract to live together, for the procreation of children, the bringing together of two families and most importantly for the love of each other.

2) There no need for homosexuals to marry? They have civil partnerships, which give same-sex couples rights identical to civil marriage.

3) A civil partnership is a relationship between two people of the same sex so a normal-sexed couple cannot have a civil partnership.

4) Two spinsters went to the European Court because they wanted a civil partnership, as it would protect them from inheritance tax. They were refused as they were sisters.

5) The civil partnership is legislation for homosexuals and lesbians, so why cannot heterosexuals have a state of partnership purely for them, something we call marriage.

6) She supports LGBT which is a Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transvestite organisation. How does a bisexual marry? Does she want marriage to involve three people?

This gay marriage issue is not about equality it is about a very small minority getting power above the majority. The homosexual/lesbian community have so many extra rights, they have legislation that gives positive discrimination in jobs such as civil servants, police, fire service, etc, they are not given jobs on their ability first and foremost.

Governments seem to have an unhealthy interest in obscure sexual habits, that says more about them then it does the ordinary man.

The Office for National Statistics says 480,000 (one per cent) consider themselves gay or lesbian, and 245,000 (0.5 per cent) bisexual. That's 1.5 per cent of the population. Why is the Government wasting time and money on a minority – there are more important issues.

Martin Clarke, Sittingbourne

Majority are being ignored

THE mass demonstrations against the invasion of Iraq were ignored, the petition for an EU referendum squashed, the promises made to get elected have been ditched with serious issues shelved.

So what does the Government agonize about? Gay marriage. Why are the majority always ignored and minorities pandered to?

For millennia 'marriage' has been defined as between two people of the opposite sex, usually for the procreation of children. Why is there such a desperate need to change the definition of another word, when even numerous gay people have said it is wrong? There are more serious issues.

Maybe next time the majority want something done and the Government isn't listening, they should enlist the help of some minority.

Friendly society offers safe (but small) return

Q HAVE you heard of the Foresters Friendly Society? Is it safe, and is its monthly tax-exempt scheme worthwhile?

A FRIENDLY societies began in Victorian times as a way for ordinary people to save. They are mutual organisations, owned by their members. The Foresters (0800 988 2418) is pretty typical. It has been in business for about 175 years, and is still allowed to offer tax benefits to small savers. Its monthly scheme lets you invest £15-£25 each month for 10 years or longer, and you get a share in the profits of the society. This is tax-exempt, and does not affect any other tax-free savings you might have, such as a cash Isa. Friendly societies are regarded as a bit plodding, so do not expect dramatic profits, but you can expect to be safe. The Foresters is fully licensed by the Financial Services Authority.

Q WE HAVE just received the annual renewal form for our home and contents insurance, and one of the questions asked is whether anyone in the house has any criminal convictions. Does the insurance company have the right to ask this? If so, can you explain why? Our son was convicted last year of a minor drugs offence and for taking someone's car without their consent, but neither of these offences was in any way connected to our home.

A THE insurance company does have the right to ask about convictions. You can refuse to answer, but the chances are that the company would then refuse to renew your policy. It is a sad fact that if someone living in the property has a conviction, there is more chance of a claim on the policy. The claim need not be because your son steals from you or damages your home, but it could well be that he knows people who might steal or cause damage. If you do not declare the convictions, and later make a claim on the policy and the insurance company discovers your son's record, your claim could be turned down just because you did not tell the truth on the renewal form. Your premiums may rise, but if you want to be insured, the only safe thing to do is come clean now.

Q MY daughter booked a holiday with friends and paid a £200 deposit on her credit card. She paid the balance by cheque after being told there would be a surcharge if she used her Visa card. Now the group has been told there are problems with the hotel and they may have to stay elsewhere or be split up. She is afraid the hotel company may be going bust. If it does, what are her rights?

TONY HETHERINGTON
MONEY CLINIC

A ACCORDING to the details you gave me, your daughter and her friends arranged their own travel by car and booked the hotel themselves, so the protection that applies to most package holidays will not work here. If the hotel owners try to make changes that are not covered by your daughter's booking agreement, she can simply say no and ask for her money back. Of course, if the company is in trouble this might not work. There is one big gleam of hope, though. Your daughter paid the hotel deposit by credit card. This means she is covered by the law that makes the card issuer jointly liable if something goes wrong. It does not matter that she paid the balance by cheque. So, if everything turns sour, tell your daughter to contact the card company, and say she wants to make a claim under Section 75 of the Consumer Credit Act. This should mean that she will get all her money back.

Q OUR fixed-rate mortgage ends soon. We like the idea of a base rate tracker, but if the base rate rises, could we then switch to a fixed rate?

A SEVERAL lenders, including Woolwich, Nationwide and the Yorkshire Building Society, offer tracker mortgages that allow you to switch later to a fixed rate. Consult a local broker for the best deal.

Q I WOULD like to invest my modest savings in a fixed-interest bond or account that pays monthly interest and is completely safe. I have found an account that yields 3pc interest, and I wonder whether you know of anything better?

A UNITED National Bank (<https://unbonlinesaver.com>) offers a one-year fixed-interest account that yields 3.45pc on a minimum investment of £2,000. You can choose to leave your money untouched and earn interest of 3.45pc, or you can opt for a monthly income with interest at 3.4pc.

Be sure to byte back over banking glitch

The shambles at the Royal Bank of Scotland group has taken days to be sorted out, and the knock-on effects could last for some time. Millions of worried bank customers – and not just those people who have accounts at RBS or Natwest – are looking for answers. Personal-finance editor ADAM AIKEN answers some of the key questions raised by the problem...

I BANK AT NATWEST OR RBS

IF YOU are one of the 17.5 million customers of RBS, Natwest or Ulster Bank, the group has promised you will not be left out of pocket.

If you are in a short-term dire situation, you can go to a branch to ask for emergency cash.

Although the bank has promised to do all it can to help, it might be worth taking as much evidence as you can.

For example, your employer might be prepared to write a note confirming your wages have been paid into the system.

Branches were open throughout last weekend, and were open for longer than usual during the week, too. There were also extra staff in the call centres.

WHAT ABOUT NON-RBS CUSTOMERS WHO ARE AFFECTED?

IT'S not just payments to and from RBS accounts that were affected. For example, company A's salary from RBS might not have arrived in Person B's account at Lloyds TSB in time, and Person B's standing order to Person C's Barclays account might have bounced, and Person C's direct debit to Company D's HSBC account might not have gone through, either.

In other words, there could a whole trail of bounced transactions and subsequent bank charges that need to be sorted out.

The banking industry generally will try to make sure no-one is left out of pocket, for several reasons.

First, the root of the problem is clear – it's not consumers' fault.

Second, other banks and building societies will not want to receive their share of the anger that is in the air at the moment.

Finally – although it's unlikely they will say so publicly – there will be a number of institutions that watched this whole thing unfold and thought "There but for the grace of God go I".

The most important thing to do is

CREDIT CRISIS: Make sure you keep a note of any discrepancies to your account monitor your account closely over the next few days.

If you have any problems, keep a note of the details and contact your own bank or building society as soon as possible. It should then liaise with RBS on your behalf.

WHAT ABOUT CREDIT SCORES?

THE RBS group has said it will work with other banks to make sure credit histories are not affected.

This is an important point because a black mark on your credit score can impact your ability to take out future loans, credit cards and mortgages. It might even affect things such as new mobile phone contracts.

Because of the chain of events such as the one outlined above, there may be people who have never been near an RBS or Natwest branch in their lives who are affected by this.

The best thing to do is wait for a few weeks and then contact the credit reference agencies (Experian, Equifax and Callcredit).

This will cost you £2 a go (although there are often free trial periods for new customers), but it's something you should do on a regular basis anyway as your credit report can help you prevent ID fraud.

If you spot any black marks on your credit history that are a result of the RBS fiasco, contact the bank or company that made the entry and ask it to amend it.

Entrepreneur is looking out for Kent's forward-thinking firms

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

ONLINE business resource Smarta has announced the launch of a competition to find the UK's most innovative businesses – and its founder wants to show what Kent companies have to offer.

Entrepreneur Shaa Wasmund, from Whitstable, said the county's firms had many good ideas and so many forward-thinking members of the business community – and this needed to be shown on the national stage.

The overall winner of 2012 Smarta 100, which is co-sponsored by O2, will receive £10,000 in cash; there are other prizes on offer.

"We are trying to find the 100 smartest businesses in the UK," said Wasmund, speaking during a break from addressing a conference of European entrepreneurs in Madrid.

"These may not be the ones with the highest turnover or the most profitable. They may be smaller companies, which are often overlooked when it comes to awards.

"If you're running a small business that stands out from the crowd that grows fans and followers as well as just customers, and you feel is worthy of national recognition, we want to hear from you.

"We're delighted to welcome O2 back as headline partner of the Smarta 100 to help us find and celebrate the most exciting entrepreneurs in the UK." Businesses can apply online at www.smarta.com/100 and the closing date for applications is Saturday, September 1.

"As I am from Kent myself, I would love to see as many businesses as possible from the county being put forward," said Wasmund, whose business offers authoritative advice and help for small companies.

An all-star line up of judges will look at the entrants.

They include Theo Paphitis, from Ryman and star of Dragons' Den; Rowan Gormley, founder of Naked Wines and winner of the Smarta 100 in 2011; Mike Soutar, founder of Shortlist and Stylist magazines; Thea Green MBE, founder of Nails Inc; and Andy McLoughlin, founder of British technology success story Huddle.

Alongside the first prize are six special awards, with each winner receiving £1,000. These are:

- Innovation – sponsored by Brother
- Resources – sponsored by Simply Business
- People – sponsored by NatWest
- Marketing – sponsored by Seven Hills
- Technology – sponsored by Intuit

- Social Impact – sponsored by Social Enterprise UK

Chairman of judges Theo Paphitis said: "I'm delighted to be joining the Smarta 100 search for this year's most exciting small businesses.

"I admire people with the passion and energy to build their own businesses and can't wait to discover the enterprising, game-changing big businesses of tomorrow that I know are out there."

Ben Dowd, business director, O2 UK, said: "The Smarta 100 is an excellent opportunity to showcase the brilliant British businesses that are revitalising the national economy through their ambition and innovation.

"We want to celebrate but also create a forum for sharing how businesses are thinking differently, becoming more agile and changing their business model to respond to the economic climate.

"First and foremost at O2 we want to help British business and we believe we can, through our people and our solutions. The Smarta 100 gives us an opportunity to immerse ourselves in those businesses in the UK to gain insight into what they are doing to grow and thrive."

TRAVEL

Dover the perfect 2013 port of call as cruise companies book in early

THE Port of Dover is set to host 149 cruise calls during the 2013 cruise season.

Ships from prominent cruise organisations including Fred. Olsen, Saga, Holland America, Princess Cruises, MSC and six-star luxury cruise lines Crystal Cruises and Seabourn Cruise Lines will all return to Dover Cruise Port during their voyages.

These are in addition to the AIDA Cruise Line, which will be bringing another new ship to Dover called the AIDAstella, which will set course on its maiden voyage through Northern Europe on March 17, following its Christening ceremony. A new four-day city tour will take passengers from Hamburg to Amsterdam and Dover in March and April.

Carnival Cruise Lines will also be returning to Dover, with the Carnival Legend operating nine turnaround calls for a variety of northern European itineraries.

In addition, MSC will have nine port calls, enabling passengers to experience the delights Kent has to offer as part of their tour.

The MSC Poescia was a recent visitor to the port and hosted a presentation on the attractions of Cyprus.

Kate O'Hara, head of business delivery at the Port of Dover, said: "First-class levels of service, excellent facilities and a wealth of shore excursion opportunities, coupled with a high-speed rail service to the centre of London, have contributed significantly to the continuous growth we are enjoying.

"Our repeat customers already know there's no better way to start a European cruise."

Job-seekers told to be flexible when looking for work to boost their prospects of success

AS the economic forecast continues to be uncertain, employers are becoming more cautious about taking on new staff, according to a survey.

And experts are urging the county's job-seekers to be as flexible as possible when it comes to looking for opportunities.

A report by the Recruitment and Employment Confederation (REC) and management accountancy KPMG showed a modest rise in permanent placements in May but at the slowest growth rate of the last five months.

The REC's report looked at data from 400 UK recruitment and employment consultancies.

But the report paints a very different picture for temporary staff recruitment, pointing to a surge in hiring in certain sectors such as financial services.

Carmen Watson, managing director of the UK's biggest temporary recruitment company, with more than 200 branches across the UK, said: "As the economy continues to slow down, demand for temporary workers is rising, especially in certain sectors such as financial services, energy and logistics.

"More and more companies are using temporary staff to help them expand their bandwidth to cater for surges in workload without being saddled with unwanted overheads in fragile economic conditions.

"Some sectors are moving in a counter-cyclical trend to the current economic conditions and are on a more permanent growth path such as technology and logistics, and it is entirely possible many of the temporary staff taken on will become permanent positions.

"We strongly urge candidates in Kent to be as flexible as possible when applying for jobs. Despite high numbers of unemployed, there are still many jobs that remain unfilled and provide opportunities for those who broaden their horizons."

TURNING THE TIDE: Roger House says many of the county's small firms would like to take on more staff but a lack of funds is holding them back

Unemployment falls in every district for a second month

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE number of people unemployed in Kent fell by 668 to 36,934 last month, with every district across the county seeing falls in their jobless figures.

Figures show that this is the second consecutive month this has happened.

Roger House, Federation of Small Businesses chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "The fall in Kent unemployment by 668 is good news, but we must not get complacent. Our spring FSB Kent Small Business Barometer shows that one in five small firms has cut jobs since last year.

"They do want to grow and take on more employees but are being held back by higher operating costs, a lack of credit from the banks and a squeeze on spending.

"Our FSB national 'Voice of Small Business' Index shows four in 10 small firms are having their applications for finance turned down and we know that many small firms have missed growth opportunities because they can't access the money they need.

"There needs to be alternative sources of finance that small firms can tap into if the nation wants to see unemployment fall further."

The number of UK self-employed was up by 84,000 to 4.7 million according to the same set of statistics. House said: "It is great news that more people are taking the leap and going it alone as the record high in self-employment shows.

"With many people struggling to find work or a full-time job, we should be doing all we can to help those with entrepreneurial spirit to set up in business and the FSB Real-Life Entrepreneur campaign seeks to help people at every stage of their business life-cycle."

"The Government's New Enterprise Allowance scheme is an excellent idea but needs to be extended if we want to see more budding entrepreneurs turn their ideas and enthusiasm into action."

High-flying graduate Jessica raises the bar to join ranks of top county law firm

ONE OF Furlley Page's recently-qualified solicitors has become the latest addition to the Kent law firm's rapidly-expanding corporate team.

Jessica Gidley, 26, from Canterbury, who spent two years training with Furlley Page, now specialises in corporate and commercial work, including guiding clients through business sales and acquisitions, reviewing, drafting and negotiating commercial contracts and advising on copyright, trademark and design-right issues.

Gidley, a former pupil at the Weald of Kent

Grammar School in Tonbridge, joined Furlley Page as a legal assistant in 2007 after graduating from the University of Kent.

She completed her legal-practice course at City University in London, where she obtained a distinction and was awarded the Martin Dockray Prize for gaining the highest overall exam results that year.

Gidley gained experience in the firm's top-ranking corporate and commercial dispute-resolution teams before qualifying as a solicitor in 2011.

She is based at the firm's Thames Gateway office at Chatham Historic Dockyard.

High earners must take stock before change to child benefit comes in

CHANGES to the taxation of child benefit due to take effect in January of next year could leave many higher-income parents out of pocket, according to financial analysts.

From Monday, January 7, any taxpayer with an adjusted net income of more than £50,000 will be hit with a new income-tax charge on the child-benefit payment either they or their partner receives.

The charge comes into effect once income exceeds £50,000 and increases on a sliding scale until income exceeds £60,000, at which point the charge amounts to the full annual benefit entitlement – thereby stripping any person earning £60,000 or more of all their own or their partner's child-benefit payments.

According to DSH Chartered Accountants and Business Advisors, however, high-earning parents may be able to offset the loss of all or some of their child-benefit entitlement by managing their finances more effectively.

Alison Turner, based at DSH's offices in Maidstone, said there were a number of options available to those affected.

"This radical change to the child-benefit system is expected to affect the tax positions of more than one million parents across the UK, but with some careful planning they could avoid or minimise the financial loss," she said.

"For example, by increasing pension contributions or by taking advantage of any salary-sacrifice schemes available that are offered by their employer, parents could manage their net adjustable income to fall below the £50,000 threshold.

"Taxpayers who do not wish to pay the new income-tax charge may simply decide to opt out of receiving child benefit.

"However, as this may affect their National Insurance credits, which in turn will affect their future entitlement to a state pension, it is advisable for them to remain registered in the system – even if they do not actually receive any child benefit.

"One additional consequence of the new tax charge will be that hundreds of thousands of child-benefit recipients will be required to complete a self-assessment tax return for the first time."

Training, courses and careers

Why vocational qualifications could build you a future in the construction industry

YOUNG people across Kent and the South East are being asked to consider vocational qualifications as an essential and practical route into construction – especially in these times of economic uncertainty.

The call came from CITB-ConstructionSkills as part of this year's Vocational Qualifications (VQ) Day.

VQ Day was a national celebration of vocational qualifications, including apprenticeships and other work-based learning paths.

The Sector Skills Council and Industry Training Board for construction used VQ Day to showcase some of its success stories, and to demonstrate to young people that vocational qualifications can provide them with practical sector and job specific skills and knowledge, helping to improve their employability within an increasingly challenging job market.

Sara Pearce, sector strategy manager for CITB-ConstructionSkills South East, said: "Vocational qualifications, such as NVQs, diplomas and apprenticeships, are becoming more and more important for people who want to work in industry, especially construction.

TRAINING DAY: A vocational course could lead you to a career in construction

"They help workers develop the sophisticated skills they need and give hands-on experience that will stand them in good stead throughout their careers.

"With high quality tutors and trainers, construction vocational qualifications are on a par with any academic qualification.

"I would encourage more young people to consider construction as a career and to look at the vocational options available to them.

"The support you receive and the skills you gain are second to none and will open doors into an exciting industry that is vital to the success of the economy."

CITB-ConstructionSkills works on behalf of employers to bring new blood into the building industry.

It is responsible for ensuring the correct training is available for those interested in working in the industry as well as supporting employers to take on new workers, such as apprentices, and works closely with education and industry partners to ensure this happens.

Ms Pearce continued: "One of the most important vocational routes into construction is an apprenticeship, which can offer an invaluable step into a career for young people, whilst being good for business.

"They also help to ensure the industry avoids skills shortages in the future by securing talent now.

"However, if we are to keep attracting the very best recruits we must ensure we work together to support this vital pool of talent, and that quality apprenticeships and job opportunities are available to these young people."

Vocational qualifications can benefit both young people looking to start their careers, as well as adults already working in the industry.

For more information on vocational qualifications or a career in construction you can visit www.bconstruction.co.uk/.

CITB-ConstructionSkills is the Industrial Training Board for the construction industry in Great Britain.

It works to ensure that construction employers have the right skills, in the right place, at the right time by investing funds and providing a wide range of industry-led skills and training solutions.

It is also a partner in ConstructionSkills, the Sector Skills Council for the construction industry, and raises employer engagement in training, providing labour market insights on future skills needs.

ACHIEVING WITH CONFIDENCE

College is getting down to business courses at its redeveloped campus

NORTH West Kent College will be offering business courses at its newly redeveloped Gravesend campus from September.

They will be in conjunction with the business courses already running at the Dartford campus.

The business BTEC Level 3 extended diploma covers marketing, law, finance and human resource management, which give an grounding for career progression in the business world.

The course links with Career Academy UK, which offers mentoring for learners and progression to a six-week paid internship with blue chip companies at Canary Wharf.

Associate director for business and computing, Stephanie Cassidy said: "The qualification that our learners gain is highly recognised by employers and the link to the Career Academy really inspires and motivates our learners."

September will also see the launch of the information and creative technology level 2

BTEC certificate. The course is designed to give the learner a general knowledge of a variety of computing elements. This will cover creative digital animation; software and website development; installation and maintenance of computer hardware; and installation and customisation of software.

The college says it offers a range of business, secretarial and computing courses at both the Dartford and Gravesend campuses, including level 1 and 2 diplomas in administration; the level 3 course which develops skills needed by personal assistants; plus ILEX Legal secretarial courses at level 2 and 3.

Computing has courses available in a range of areas from the IT user, IT technician and creative media enabling progression into employment areas including: IT support, networking, development marketing, gaming, software engineering and web development.

Raymond wins a royal scholarship

A CARPENTRY apprentice at Canterbury College has won a prestigious scholarship to improve a stately home recently saved by Prince Charles.

Raymond Alvsavag, 23, from Chartham, is one of only 10 people to be awarded a scholarship on the Building Skill In Craft Apprenticeship Scheme which is run by the Prince's Foundation. After he completes a Level 3 NVQ in wood occupations at the college, Raymond will join the Prince's Foundation at Dumfries House in Scotland.

The summer school will see students design and construct a garden feature on the Dumfries Estate, with input from the local community.

The project begins in July and will be completed in November. The rest of Raymond's apprenticeship will see him working on a variety of projects across the UK, learning from master craftsmen in his field.

The judges were impressed by Raymond's application, which included samples of his college work. He said: "I was amazed to get it. Working there is going to be a big honour."

A Prince's Foundation spokesman said: "Craft skills are dying out in the UK and it is vital that we help to preserve them and it is through the enthusiasm and commitment of apprentices such as Raymond that this will be achieved."

Colleges celebrate as top teachers take the plaudits in annual awards

MIDKENT College is celebrating the achievements of two lecturers recognised with distinctions in the 2012 Pearson Teaching Awards.

Steve Casey and Michaela Ward were shortlisted from a record number of nominations.

Nominations are received in the form of online thank-you messages to teachers or lecturers who have made a real difference, with each considered by the Pearson Teaching Awards judging panel.

Steve Casey, 42, from Gillingham, is programme area leader for engineering at Mid-Kent College's Medway Campus and has received a distinction in the category of Further Education Lecturer of the Year (London and the South East).

Michaela Ward, 26, from Rainham, has now relocated to Exeter but was an A-level biology teacher at the Medway Campus at the time of her nomination. She has received a distinction in the category of Outstanding Use of Technology in Education (London and the South East).

MidKent College acting principal Sue McLeod said: "This is fantastic news and we are delighted that both Steve and Michaela have been recognised by the Pearson Teaching Awards panel."

John Bartlett from Bromley College of Further and Higher Education also received a commendation for FE Teacher/Lecturer of the Year.

Junior school racing drivers feel the need for speed in competition

THE magnificent seven battled it out for the title of Thanet's top junior school racing team.

Seven teams were on the starting grid for the seventh annual green power battery car challenge in the grounds of the Chatham and Clarendon Grammar Federation, in Ramsgate.

Competition was fierce as the specially-designed cars powered their way round the circuit in an endurance race, and a skills test.

The lead in the endurance race changed hands several times until St Peter's juniors emerged race winners.

But Drapers Mills School in Margate were the overall winners for best average results in all categories – including the race, skills test, team presentation, design portfolio, greenest car, and the teacher's race.

Competition organiser Lester Edmeades said: "It is great to have a new overall winner this year – Drapers Mills has never taken the top prize and the team are deserved champs."

"Once again the high level of enthusiasm, dedication and support was astounding and all the competitors deserve a huge 'well done'."

"Thanks also go to our excellent team of race

CARS: The winning St Peter's team in the pits marshals, time-keepers and track builders, and Ling Metals for supplying 1,000 tyres to help us create the circuit."

The competition began following the success of Chatham House in the national green power battery car championships over the last decade when they have consistently been in the top 10 in the UK.

A build-a-car project was launched as part of the Chatham House science and technology link with junior schools, and the junior kit car grand prix flourished.

University's chemistry activity day for pupils goes off with a big bang

MORE than 250 school pupils learned about the science behind everyday things such as toothpaste, tap water, putty and glowsticks at a University of Greenwich chemistry activity day.

Chemistry at Work, organised by the university's school of science, saw a team of scientists put on activities for the students aged 14 and 15. The event took place at the university's Medway Campus.

Activities included an explosives demonstration caught on a high-speed camera, a fire power demonstration, identifying poisons, fingerprinting and DNA detection, fitness tests, and magnetic power.

Dr Samantha Booth, the school of science outreach coordinator, said: "The day was a great success, and the students and teachers thoroughly enjoyed themselves. It was absolutely brilliant."

"The aim of Chemistry at Work is to highlight the many different career paths for students who choose to pursue science at A-level. A lot of the students said they didn't realise what opportunities there were, and that it had opened doors for them."

The schools taking part were Hartsdown Technology College, Margate; Northfleet School for Girls; The Judd School, Tonbridge; St George's C of E Foundation School, Broadstairs; Dover Grammar School for Boys; Rainham School for Girls; and Crowns Wood College, Eltham.

THE INTERVIEW

Neil Buchanan

A rare attack of popular art

The former children's TV presenter talks to Joe Bill about modern art and not being dead

THE art critics only like art that we, the public, don't understand. All that does is justify their lofty position, because they are the only ones who do understand it..."

Less than 10 years ago, Neil Buchanan fronted an art show that was beamed out to more than six million viewers every week. Running for 17 years and 500 episodes, Art Attack took children's television and, in particular, art shows, to a new level.

He said: "I don't like the poncy art world – people talk about how wonderful a painting is when really we are all standing there thinking it's a load of codswallop. Then they whack a £40,000 price-tag on it and we still don't know whether to hang it upside down or back to front. There is a lot of nonsense in the art world."

"That's what Art Attack was, it was the art show for people who don't like art."

For most 20- to 35-year-olds in Britain, Neil Buchanan was part of their childhood. The man who brought art to the masses from the Maidstone TV Studios is remembered fondly as one of the cornerstones of children's TV.

Overcoming vicious internet rumours of his death, Buchanan returns with his latest exhibition, inspired by his frustrations with the 2012 Olympics. He said: "I launched my first collection last year, which was Hope Street, and now we have Backstreet Games."

Buchanan will display his new art pieces at bistros and small venues around the UK, starting with Woods Restaurant in The Pantiles at Tunbridge Wells, just a short distance from his East Sussex home in Peasmarsh.

Explaining his new work, he said: "I knew everyone would be going Olympic-crazy, but I also thought at some point everyone will become sick of the bloomin' Olympics. So I decided to go the opposite way."

"I think it is a great event – I think it's awesome – but I'm cynical about all these people who talk about legacies."

"These people are making a huge amount of money by protecting words such as 'Olympics' and 'London 2012' by clamping down on charities and schools who try to use those words to celebrate and inspire young people. But they throw us a little titbit by talking about legacies. What is the legacy for people outside of east London? If you want to talk about legacy and inspiring young people, the bottom line is that they get out on to the street and do their own versions anyway."

BACKSTREET GAMES: Neil Buchanan's latest collection is to be displayed at Woods Restaurant, Tunbridge Wells, until September

"The sporting side will inspire people – of course it will – but they will be out in the street, chalking the pitch out and playing their own version. That's where the art is – it's the backstreet version of the Olympics."

Punters can buy limited-edition prints of the Backstreet Games pieces, but Buchanan is very pragmatic about the art world.

"I thought about how many people who have followed me over the years actually go into poncy art galleries... a very, very small percentage. So I wanted to try something different by bringing it to places like Woods."

"At the end of the day, all art is, is really a picture. You either stick it on your wall or you don't – hopefully, people will stick mine on their wall and if they do it's a privilege for me."

Since his retirement from TV, Neil Buchanan has been the subject of a number of rumours.

"I've been asked to do the jungle, Big Brother, all of them... but no, not for me. I don't do the celebrity thing – it just doesn't appeal."

And why would he need to? With three Bafta

Awards to his name, Buchanan was for a long time the darling of children's TV.

"With Art Attack, I was just putting the mischief into the art, making it accessible to people. There was already Tony Hart and Rolf Harris, but because Art Attack looked quite modern it made the others look quite dated."

"We won three Baftas and were nominated 12 times – we became the yardstick by which they measured everyone else."

Fame came hand in hand with the show's success, but this has never been something that has caused much bother in Buchanan's life. He said: "I remember some kids came charging towards me – my little girl said 'Watch out, Dad, there's some kids coming up' and I replied 'Darling, they paid for this holiday'. That is something I will never forget – the audience put me where I am now."

However, he could never have imagined the level of fame he would acquire long after his Art Attack retirement. Even now, if you type into an internet search engine the name Neil Buchanan, by the time you press the B button the phrase 'Neil Buchanan Dead' arrives on your screen.

"It was all pretty grim. It was about five years ago. There was a gang of idiots around at the time who used this new medium called Facebook to dig at celebrities."

"Unfortunately, the rumour happened just as we went on a family holiday to Wales and there were no phones or signal or way of contacting people. It was just as we got there and I didn't know about it for a week. My mum, who was 75 at the time, had several people coming up to her and saying they were awfully sorry to hear about my death. And no one could get in touch with me for a week."

His loyal Art Attack audience was naturally shocked and the rumour spread like wildfire across the social-networking site.

"There was a lot of confusion because at the time Tony Hart died and there was also the tragic episode with Mark Spait, so you had two TV artists who had died and then the rumours about me, so people mixed a lot of stuff up. But that's the world we live in. I don't give two hoots about it other than it affecting my mum."

• Neil Buchanan will introduce Backstreet Games at Woods Restaurant, Tunbridge Wells, on Tuesday, July 17; the display runs until Sunday, September 9. Visit www.woodsrestaurant.co.uk or www.neilbuchanan.co.uk for details.

Basque in the flavours of some Spanish dishes by our seaside

THE Williams & Brown Tapas Bar in Whitstable is totally in keeping with the classy seaside-town surroundings. It is not overstated, there are no flashing lights, it is just a simple restaurant... a simple idea that oozes quality and attention to detail.

The restaurant is predominantly a tapas bar, as the name suggests, although there are other fish dishes and paellas on the menu to maintain the Spanish theme. Estrella is the beer of choice, while the cheapest bottle of Hispanic wine comes in at £15.50.

After recommendation from our attendant to decide on five or six dishes for two people, our choices began to flow from the kitchen. The chef decided, and quite rightly, to start us off with a lighter dish – almost like serving up a starter.

The manchego with membrillo ewes' milk cheese and quince jelly (£6.95) arrived first and blew me away. The sweet quince with the sour manchego was a match made in heaven, while the chilli it was served up with added spice to an excellent collection of flavours.

In a very European start to the meal, our next dish of Basque chorizo and salchichon (£6.25), which we combined with the left-over manchego, creating our own aperitivo.

A huge bowl of deep-fried whitebait with aioli dip (£5.95) arrived as a stop-gap before our more meaty dishes – well, we couldn't eat in Whitstable without having a little fish! They were crispy and delicious with no hint of grease, but a good number of them were left behind as we entered the business end of the meal.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

The dishes arrived at intervals of about five minutes, ensuring that each was given a proper airing on the table before the next arrived. Up next were the Albondigas meatballs in tomato ragout (£8.50), again cooked to perfection with no dryness – which can often be the downfall of a meatball dish. The tomato ragout smothered the beef, which tenderly fell apart on contact with taste buds.

Then came the most anticipated dish of the day, the beef Madrid, thinly-sliced ribeye steak, chargrilled and served with salad leaves and shavings of manchego (£12.50).

The four small pieces of steak still cooking in their own juices were top-quality. I usually go for a dollop of something with my beef, but this didn't need it. The flavours of the meat did it all. It was an excellent dish if a little pricey for the size.

Our final choice, which operated more as a side order towards the end, was the classic patatas bravas – deep-fried potatoes with spiced tomato sauce (£3.95). It was again a large bowl and a fair bit came home in a doggy bag.

The atmosphere was intimate, the staff were knowledgeable and the food was excellent, all for £59.15.

Now Whitstable is not quite the Costa Vasca, but it is beginning to do a good impression.

Former Ramsay chef learns how to brew

RENOWNED chef Angela Hartnett MBE has visited Shepherd Neame's Faversham brewery to find out about women's role in brewing for part of a BBC TV series.

Great British Food Revival will see chefs across the UK investigating forgotten food traditions. Canterbury-born Angela, who has worked with the likes of Gordon Ramsay, joined head-brewer Richard Frost to create 34,000 pints of the brewery's ale.

The pressure was on for the first-timer as she mimicked the women brewers of yesteryear, known as brewsters or ale wives. The 20-episode series is due to broadcast in the autumn.

New chef sets record at Tudor Park venue

A RISING star of the culinary world has become the new head chef at Tudor Park in Bearsted.

Fresh from winning a Europe-wide catering competition, Tom Biddle has taken up his new post at the age of just 25 – making him the youngest executive head chef among the Marriott Hotel Group's 58 UK-based hotels.

He has already clocked up 10 years of catering experience and says he "eats, sleeps and breathes food". The move to Tudor Park will see him leading a team of 12, serving up dishes for the hotel's restaurant and catering for up to 250 people at business banquets, golf events and up to 50 weddings a year.

A finest Kent roast is not just for winter

SUCCULENT meats, juicy vegetables and plenty of gravy... is your mouth watering? Of course, we can only be talking about the classic king of dinners, the Sunday roast

It is synonymous with the UK and we've all grown up with the idea of families getting together to enjoy this winning combination.

Its greatness as a meal has travelled overseas as many tourist areas in France and Spain will strategically place the roast dinner on the menu to appease hungry Brits.

But here in Kent we are taking the tradition of the Sunday roast to the next level. We all know it is easy to change a roast in accordance with the seasons. There are the filling vegetables of winter such as Brussels sprouts, cabbage and parsnips, or the lighter summer offerings like new potatoes, peas and runner beans, but it is the choice of meats here in the Garden of England that has changed the face of the roast.

Gone are the days when lamb, beef, pork or chicken were all that Kent had to offer. Be on the look-out now for roast goose with chilli carrots, roast duck with plum sauce... or even roast woodpigeon!

And let's not forget Kent's glorious coast, which offers up so many sumptuous fish dishes. Along the beaches, our restaurants often promote their freshly-caught cod or plaice – or maybe shellfish are more your thing.

The choice of dishes that Kentish folk can proudly call 'locally sourced' provides an extra joy to our Sunday lunch.

Here are six places in which to savour the experience.

competition is revisited in a marathon of madness that sees the world's greatest sporting events shrunk down to theatrical size.

Among the many questions answered will be: Is darts really a sport? Which is more boring, cricket or baseball? Who invented cheese-rolling and why isn't it in the Olympics?

COMMUNITY

Our city has something for everyone to enjoy

IDEAL to visit at any time but particularly attractive in the summer, Canterbury is one of the most attractive cities in Britain and receives thousands of visitors each year.

And it also boasts what is increasingly rare these days – a wide range of local stores offering distinctive goods and services.

The Burgate and King's Mile areas of the city are particularly popular in this respect and have some of the finest independent stores anywhere in the south of England.

Many food stores specialise in the produce of the Garden of England, which is also served up in eateries – meaning meat, vegetables, fish, wine and beer really are locally sourced.

And this week on Wednesday, July 4, it is the official Independents' Day – a support-your-local-shop campaign inspired by the US's national day of celebration.

The cathedral and its surroundings are recognised by UNESCO as being of worldwide importance, while there are many other buildings of historic significance, including sections of the original medieval city wall with its towers and a Roman villa.

It is also the home of Kent County Cricket club, while punts ply their way past parks and open spaces through the river, which flows through the city centre.

But as well as a city with a rich past, it is one looking very much to the future with an excellent range of shopping facilities, hotels, cafés, bars, pubs and clubs.

The winding streets offer treat upon treat as shoppers can choose from unique products unavailable elsewhere; the friendly service of small stores is a feature of Canterbury's attraction to visitors.

The city is famous for its bookshops – an important feature for an area that is home to top-class educational facilities such as the University of Kent and Christchurch University.

The rebuilt and extended Marlowe Theatre opened its doors last year and is bringing top names in music, drama, dance and comedy to the city, while the more eclectic Gulbenkian also has a wide range of events including music, comedy and visiting speakers.

There is a flourishing music scene in the city's pubs and there was even a Canterbury Sound in the 1970s featuring bands such as Caravan.

Nowadays, the Lounge On The Farm festival is one of the most popular in the UK and has attracted top-name acts in recent years, including Echo And The Bunnymen, Dexys Midnight Runners and The Streets.

For a mixture of great shopping opportunities away from the clone stores that dominate so many towns, entertainment and top-class food and drink, Canterbury is a must-visit location – whether you live on the doorstep or make a special journey to enjoy its unique charms.

DAY OUT

Do you have what it takes to demonstrate your skills and become a knight of the king's court?

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

ON your marks, get set and go to Dover Castle for Medieval Olympics on special days throughout July, when King Henry II and the bravest champions assemble to put on 12th-century-style games.

Families are welcome to come and try their hands at the skills that made a fighting man – or woman – of the period.

The king will be in residence at his mighty stronghold, Dover, looking for the boldest young squires to join his jousting team.

He will scrutinise them as they are put through their paces by his great knight William the Marshall.

Under Sir William's fearsome glare, young knights will be taught how to joust and use a sword and find out if they have what it takes to become a knight of England at the court of King Henry II.

The king will not only be seeking skills on the battlefield. At his palace, furnished to the height of 12th-century luxury, only those with the finest courtly manners will thrive.

Young visitors will learn how to charm their noble masters and mistresses at lessons in chivalry given by the beautiful Queen Margaret, daughter-in-law to King Henry.

William the Marshall and King Henry II will be waiting for a fresh crop of knights to take on the challenge of the tournament – which of Kent's young squires and ladies will take up the challenge?

Dover Castle is open daily from 10am-6pm, with Medieval Olympic character days on Saturday and Sunday, July 7-8, Saturday and Sunday, July 14-15, and Saturday to Tuesday, July 21-31.

Normal admission prices apply of just £16.50 for adults, £14.90 for concessions, £9.90 for children and £42.90 for a family ticket. English Heritage go members free.

Visitors can also take the opportunity to explore some of the castle's other amazing areas, including the Secret Wartime Tunnels, now featuring the exciting and dramatic Operation Dynamo: Rescue From Dunkirk experience.

TALENTED new artists will be exhibiting their sculptural work in the fabulous surroundings of Godinton House gardens.

The work will be displayed throughout the 13 acres of formal and wild gardens, where crisp topiary or shimmering wild grasses make the perfect backdrop.

Exhibiting at Godinton for the first time this year, Scottish artist Rob Mulholland will be showing Vestige – eerie mirrored figures that shimmer in and out of their landscape.

The dream-like theme is continued with Linda Johns's ethereal wire figures and woven web forms.

Cecilia Buchanan is celebrating the Olympics with a synchronised swimming team in the formal pond. Open from 2pm-5.30pm.

RETURNING to Charlton Park for a third year, Durham University's award-winning Castle Theatre Company is performing Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream.

The picnicking audience will be transported to a world of woodland fairies and theatrical endeavours while following four young people's quest to find their soul-mates, despite what life – and roguish pixies – throw at them.

The two previous Castle Theatre productions, Much Ado About Nothing and Macbeth, were well received by local audiences and enjoyed by visiting overseas students.

Tickets £12 adults, £7 children and students.

Wed to Sat, July 18-21
01732 866114
www.heverfestival.co.uk

THE Hever Summer Festival swings back into action month with the totally-spiffing play Daisy Pulls It Off.

Inspired by Angela Brazil's schoolgirl novels, Denise

Deegan's comedy brilliantly parodies the life and soul of a girl's boarding school of yesteryear... "all gym-slips and hockey sticks, a sort of St Trinian's without the delinquency".

The plucky heroine, Daisy Meredith, with the help of her best friend, Trixie Martin, overcomes a series of trials and tribulations by being honourable in all things.

The original West End production of Daisy Pulls It Off started back in 1983 at The Gielgud Theatre.

Tickets start at £14.

Buying a new home can help the environment – and your bank balance

ACCORDING to the New Homes Marketing Board Foundation and Zero Carbon Hub, owners of new homes built to the latest regulations could benefit from halved fuel bills.

The organisations calculated the potential annual savings that could come from living in a different type of energy-efficient home (2010 standards) and compared these with an upgraded Victorian home.

On this basis a four-bedroom, detached new home could be 55 per cent cheaper to run, meaning a saving of £1,312, while a one-bedroom groundfloor flat could save 47 per cent – £426.

Homes built from 2016 could reduce bills by 79 per cent, a reduction of £1,865.

"We have always been aware of the energy savings that can be made living in a brand-new property", said Jo Richards, marketing and corporate manager at Hillreed Homes, an independent developer for more than 35 years.

"Legislation over the years, coupled with development in the knowledge of what is needed to provide warm, draught-free homes run by efficient boilers, has steadily improved the capacity of homes to 'hold' their heat, thereby reducing carbon footprint and high fuel bills."

Neil Jefferson, NHBC Foundation's director and Zero Carbon Hub's chief executive, said: "The cost data we have produced, while not guaranteed, gives an indication of the kind of monetary savings that could be made in the long term. We believe this kind of data could be useful for people making the decision to buy a new home."

Patience paid off, says property leader on visit to former airfield

ONE OF the UK's senior property experts has visited Kings Hill to see and hear how the private and public sectors can work together to create new developments.

Liz Peace, chief executive of advisory body the British Property Federation, was invited by Alex King, deputy leader of Kent County Council, and Andrew Blevins, managing director of Kings Hill developer Liberty Property Trust UK Ltd.

She heard how, 23 years ago, Liberty Property Trust UK Ltd and Kent County Council formed a collaborative public-private sector partnership to develop Kings Hill.

In that time it has evolved into a community with a series of residential villages, a business park with more than 200 businesses creating employment for some 5,000 people and supporting retail, leisure and community amenities.

It has since been named the country's most successful new village in a national report on placemaking, ahead of Prince Charles's Poundbury development in Dorset.

Kings Hill's design, the provision of public and private amenity space, transport links, car-parking and community provision were cited as being particularly successful.

"It just goes to show how good design and a patient approach pays off," said Liz Peace.

"It was a great opportunity to see how Liberty and Kent County Council have worked together to transform a derelict airfield into a stylish, cohesive community that has become one of the most sought-after business locations in the South East and an aspirational place to live.

"I was particularly impressed by the variety of amenities on site, which is a great benefit to those working and living at Kings Hill."

IT IS refreshing that resources can be found for an exciting new sports car at a time when the motor industry is rightly obsessed with slashing emissions and fuel-consumption.

Mind you, it's rather bizarre that one of the partners in this project is Toyota, the high-profile champion of petrol-electric hybrid cars, notably the sector-leading Prius.

Not so hard to comprehend, though, when you realise that Toyota's obsession with hybrid power has not come without cost – and I'm not talking about millions of yen invested in the technology.

For the Japanese giant is currently stuck with the 'boring' label once attached to every worthy project tried by Nissan, eventually forcing a change of tack that has spawned such big-sellers as the Nissan Qashqai and Juke crossovers.

Toyota will hope its new jointly-produced GT-86 coupé can do something similar, restoring glamour the company enjoyed when famous for sports stars like the Celica, Supra and MR2.

Its partner in the venture, Subaru, could also do with an injection of credibility from its BRZ version of the same new car; the brand now has a fantastic new diesel engine to offer loyal fans, but its image as a glamour brand was damaged when the old rally-bred Impreza was blitzed by increasingly weird facelifts and dubious add-ons like gold alloys.

So, Toyota and Subaru have common ground here, apart from the fact that the former owns a sizeable chunk of shares in the latter.

They appear to have hit their joint target spot on. The new car is a compact, smart low-slung coupé with a traditional front-engine/rear-wheel-drive layout for best possible weight distribution, and aggressively priced from £24,995, with lots of kit as standard including alloys, push-button engine start and dual-zone air-con.

That makes it a unique proposition around that price unless you count the Mazda MX-5 roadster.

The joint car also has an interesting powertrain: a typical Subaru flat-four engine that sits low in the car and contributes to the car's agility and poise. Defying the modern trend, it also lacks turbocharging, though this is not expected to last once aftermarket specialists get their hands on the little sportster.

A slick six-speed gearbox is fitted as standard, but both marques are offering the car with a six-speed auto (£1,500), allowing F1-style paddle changes on the steering wheel.

Despite being designed to boost the sporting image of both marques, though, the GT86/BRZ is not without some practicality: 2+2 seating has been added so that a couple of children or small adults could squeeze into the back, thus helping an enthusiast argue with the other half that it can just about function as a useful second car for the family... though don't expect Gran to come out for a ride

Double acts combined thinking delivers true sporting pleasure

IT'S TWICE AS NICE:

Toyota's GT-86 coupé and Subaru's BRZ go against the current trend for fuel efficient and low emission cars to deliver two real drivers' cars

DON'T LIKE

... how long we've had to wait for both Japanese marques to come to their senses and produce a car with much-needed character and glamour.

NOT SURE

... there is quite enough practicality in the cabin to attract the take-up the car really deserves, but the kids will just have to lump it now and again.

REALLY LIKE

... the fact that someone (Toyota, surprisingly) has realised that there is still a market and desire for affordable performance motoring.

XJ no longer living in the past

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

JAGUAR'S original XJ6 arrived around the time that rock band Jethro Tull released its classic 1969 track Living In The Past.

Company-founder Sir William Lyons called the new car "the finest Jaguar ever" and, like the Tull single, it was a hit, but one that condemned Jaguar to living in the past for some 40 years.

Stuck in an automotive version of the plot from Groundhog Day, the company heeded Jag traditionalists and continually tried to re-create the look of the original XJ until it looked horribly outmoded against increasingly sharp-suited German opposition.

At least until 2010, when, emboldened by the success of its radically-different and smaller XF saloon, Jaguar broke the cycle of retro re-creation and receding sales with an all-new XJ.

The squarish grille remained, but old-fashioned twin headlamps were replaced by wraparound slitted arrays, while a wide low-slung body and glassy rear end gave this new XJ a unique style and swagger in its class.

Suddenly, it's fashionable again to be seen getting out of the big Jag at red-carpet events, political summits, conferences and the company car park. The XJ even made an appearance in several episodes of the recent American hit TV thriller series Homeland, alongside another UK import, actor Damian Lewis.

And though now a huge car when compared with the original, this impression is quickly dispelled behind the wheel, for the latest XJ harks back to the original 1960s car in one key area – agility and handling.

Admittedly, those buying the long-wheelbase version tested here probably won't drive themselves, and chauffeur James would get earache for attacking tight bends with the boss lounging in the back.

But the fact the big cat can do this at all,

SUBSTANCE AND STYLE:

Jaguar's XJ impresses at every turn; from stunning look to superb interior, the carmaker has created a car worthy of its more famous predecessors though, impresses as much as its obvious style and charm; an all-aluminium body some 150 kilos lighter than its next closest rival helps, but near-perfect 51:49 weight balance between front and rear and Jaguar's well-known chassis savvy are also key factors.

Like the exterior, the interior is also quite unlike anything else in its sector; from continually re-creating the Jag look of old, the proud UK premium marque has gone ahead and created a whole new contemporary style worthy of early days when Jaguar established itself as a manufacturer of style and innovation with classics like the E-Type roadster and Mark II saloon.

The cabin is airy and spacious anyway, thanks to a large glazed area, standard-fit panoramic sunroof – with opening front section – and a fascia that arcs away to be bounded by wood or carbon-fibre detailing below the screen – a feature that would have been at the front of the dash in 'trad Jag' models of old.

Another 'new Jag' detail is the large automatic gearbox selector knob that rises from the centre console once activated by the ignition – a stylish and unique feature.

Prices start at £55,515 for the standard car – the stretched model (LWB), with an extra 12.5cm of legroom, adds £3,000 to the price.

The car oozes quality even in entry-level Luxury trim – our car was an upper-middle range Portfolio (from £66,515) model.

Three engines are offered: a 5.0-litre supercharged V8 petrol unit with its supercar acceleration (0-60mph in just 4.7 seconds) grabs the headlines; an unblown version of the same engine grabs none; while a 3.0-litre V6 diesel takes all the sales and an ever-growing stash of awards.

The silky diesel – tested here – delivers a sensible 275bhp, quite enough to move the relatively lightweight Jag around with pace if needed, yet it can average almost 40mpg with care.

MOTORING NEWS

Rapid makes it special 'six'

SKODA has revived the name Rapid, last worn – without great justification – on a 1980s rear-engine coupé from the Czech marque.

It should be more deserving on the boot of a thoroughly-modern all-new compact saloon due later this year, designed to sit between the current Fabia supermini and Octavia family range, and increase the Skoda line-up to six models.

Mazda means real business

DARTFORD-based Mazda UK is aiming to make more inroads into the company-car sector by launching an aggressive contract hire rate of £229.99 per month on the tax-efficient 2.2-litre diesel Mazda6 Business Line hatchback.

It has followed up by also promising delivery of this well-spec'd-up version within 14 days at a time when some marques are struggling to meet fleet demand.

Great estate from Hyundai

HYUNDAI launches the classy-looking Tourer (estate) version of its impressive new-generation i30 family hatchback on Monday, July 23, priced from £16,195.

The Korean marque says the newcomer has greater luggage capacity than key competitors – 528 litres and 1,642 litres with seats up and folded flat respectively – and even outshines some models from the market segment above.

New Mazda5 making the right waves

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

OLD VW camper-vans and minibuses are cool. Values have shot up in recent years as people bought into the surfer image delivered by these old clunkers.

Never mind that the air-cooled rear engine/rear-driven layout makes for a primitive life on the road, they still deliver in buckets and spades when you pull up at the beach.

And maybe this is the place in the sun Mazda sought for its second-generation Mazda5 MPV – how else do you explain the extravagant wave design along the flanks?

But King Canute could have told the Japanese marque this whole wave thing can be tricky – in a bid to look cool, you risk being a washout.

Whether you like the waves or not, though, there's no arguing with the practicality of this three-row seven-seater.

Following on from its predecessor, it has sliding rear doors – powered on the flagship Sport spec tested here – making life particularly easy.

The two rearmost seats – usually the preserve of kids – can be pressed into service for adults if the middle row is slid forward slightly, while all-rear seats fold flat to create a van-like cargo area.

You might argue, though, that this is not really a full seven-seater; the centre seat in the middle row is a bit miserly, even though it does flip up to allow easy entry/exit for back-row passengers.

But that fact and those controversial waves are the only big criticism here; like its predecessor, the Mazda5 is a rarity in the MPV sector because it offers a driver-pleasing chassis borrowed from the Mazda3 hatchback – no slouch in the handling department.

This counters my frequent complaint that many MPV-owners have such vehicles pressed on them by the need to cart kids and dogs about at weekends, only to endure the type's usual sloppy handling for far longer periods during the weekday commuting.

The Mazda, on the other hand, is a car for everyday needs. The driver still gets a high and commanding view, but, without the suggestion that the door handles may brush the tarmac when cornering, it doesn't corner like a hatchback – but you could not expect that from any MPV unless it had a bone-jarringly firm ride.

Fit and finish inside is good, with a typically well-organised dashboard and good stowage.

Prices start at £18,175 for the 115ps (113bhp) 1.8-litre petrol budget option, while the 150ps (148bhp) 2.0-litre petrol (from £19,365) is the sporty alternative – 0-62mph in 11 seconds at the cost of an official combined 41mpg fuel consumption – even if it doesn't really offer a great deal more than its sister.

The smart money, though, is on the 115ps (113bhp) 1.6-litre diesel (from £20,660) as tested here. It's the slowest option but doesn't feel it and is well refined, even though an MPV cabin allows plenty of scope for boom and reverberation. With an official combined 54.3mpg, it is also by far the most economical.
